SENATE COMMITTEE ANNOUNCES OPPOSITION TO ALL PRIVATE OFFERS FOR MUSCLE SHOALS

Tariff Bill Is Styled "Mortgage on Country"

MINORITY REPORT ON PROPOSED ACT FILED SATURDAY

Simmons, Ranking Democrat on Committee, Says Bill Was Drawn for Special Interests.

CHARGES SPOLIATION OF PEOPLE'S PURSES

Prohibitive Rates Will Maintain High Profits Without Aiding American Labor, Says Report.

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.

Washington, May 6.—Developments today in senate consideration of the pending tariff bill included the filing of the minority report attacking the measure, approval of the finance committee amendments increasing the duties on lactic acid, and an informal discussion among republican leaders of measures designed to speed up senate action.

Night sessions beginning next Tuesday with a view to forcing curtailment of debate were among subjects discussed by the leaders, but no decision was reached. The holding of a party conference to map out a program also was considered together with a suggestion that senate rules be amended so as to prevent unlimited debate. The later received little support.

Three roll-calls were demanded by the democrats on the lactic acid paragraph, but the committee amendments under which the rates of this acid would be from two cents to nine cents a pound in place of the house duties of from 1 1-2 cents to five cents were accepted by substantial majorities on almost strictly party votes.

Minority Report.

The minority report on the bill was filed by Senator Simmons, of North Carolina, ranking democrat on the finance committee, who asserted that if properly titled the tariff would be termed "an act to mortgage the country and its resources to the protected and monopolized industries."

Declaring that the atmosphere of the capitol had been surcharged for eighteen months with the "frenzied clamor of the protected industries for prohibitive rates," the report said these interests believed that embargoes and prohibitions would do for them now what embargoes and prohibitions did for them during the war.

"The rates imposed in this bill," the report continued, "are rates that in their operation, while not enhancing the price of labor or operating in any way in the interest of labor, will irresistibly tend to the maintenance of present high profits and prices of which the people now complain and furnish an opportunity to further increase these prices, while the power to further increase these rates vested in the president will operate as an invitation to invoke the exercise of these extra legislative powers when the prescribed rates are not sufficient to safeguard the protected producrs against the risk of foreign competition in case they may wish to raise their prices above the level of the protection against such competition afforded by the rates written in the bill."

"To Out-Aldrich Aldrich."

Senator Simmons further asserted that proponents of the bill were actuated by the belief that the only way to afford protection agains. foreign competition "is to double the dizzy heights of the protection wall and to so out-Aldrich Aldrich as to make him and his memory anathema to his quandam idolatrous followers."

Senator Simmons also said the taxes proposed to be imposed by this bill would be as real as those imposed in the revenue bill and probably would be as great, or from three to four billions of dollars. Asserting that the majority report had made "no direct, positive or unequivocal statement," and that there "had been no serious discussion of the measure of protection upon which the rates proposed were ascertained and determined," the senator said:

"In levying taxes imposing such a stupendous burden upon the people, a burden from which no man, woman or child can escape, nothing could be concealed or left to conjecture which may be necessary for the taxpayers to determine for themselves whether the taxes imposed are greater than is necessary to accomplish the purpose and policy to be attain-

Senator Watson And Tom Felder In Controversy

Former Georgian Challenges Georgia Senator to Physical Settlement of Differences.

BY JAMES A. HOLLOMON.
Constitution Bureau,
Raleigh Hotel.

Washington, May 6.—(By Constitution Leased Wire.)—The barrage of epithets now passing between Senator Thomas E. Watson, of Georgia, and Thomas B. Felder, of New York, formerly of Georgia, is creating intense interest not only among Georgians at the capital, but among the politicians of both parties, for the very good reason that the attorney general of the United States is directly, and Chief Justice Taft, indirectly, involved.

In New York yesterday a challenge in writing to Senator Watson, of Georgia, to meet him "alone in a room" was issued by Felder, a lawyer, of 165 Broadway.

Senator Watson had attacked Felder in the United States senate in connection with the pardon procured from President Taft in behalf of Charles W. Morse.

Cause of Challenge.

The challenge to settle the matter as between man and man was provoked by the assertion of Senator Watson that he had denounced Felder to his face and that the latter had swallowed it meekly. Felder also resented vehemently the charge that he was "a lobbyist," not a lawyer."

Felder also wrote to Senator Caraway, of Arkansas, denying that Attorney General Harry M. Daughterty had any connection with the Morse case.

The reply and challenge of Felder to Senator Watson as quoted today in the New York papers, follows:

"Thomas E. Watson is so well-known as a common liar that it is hardly worth while to notice anything he could say.

"Hiding behind his position on the floor of the senate, he uttered a cowardly slander with refence to me. His claim that he ever used such language to my face is absurdly false. He is a blustering coward as well as a common liar, and nothing could induce him to use language of that character to any one face to face. If he thinks himself serious, I would be glad to meet him alone in a room agreed upon and talk the matter over. I make this suggestion hopefully, but without confidence that the dirty coward will accept."

Letter to Caraway.

The letter of Felder to Senator Caraway follows:

"May 3, 1922.

"Hon. T. H. Caraway, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

"Dear Sir: It is inconceivable to me that a senator who fairly represents the people of the great state of ...rkansas could, under even the temptation of partisan politics, assail a distinguished member of the official family of the president of the United States. The statement made by you that Charles W. Morse ever at any time or under any circumstances paid Hon. Harry M. Daugherty $25,000 to get him out of the penitentiary is absolutely without any foundation in fact.

"Af the time Charles W. Morse was serving a sentence in the Atlanta penitentiary I was a member of the Atlanta (Georgia) bar. I was attorney for Fred L. Seeley and his interests, including The Atlanta Georgian. Mr. Seeley was essentially a philanthropist. He became sentimentally interested in the fate of Charles W. Morse. He employed me to examine fully the case and to determine if upon the merits he was entitled to executive clemency. I reached the conclusion that the penalty was excessive, in view of the fact that the court of appeals had reversed the lower court on several of

PRISONER TRIES TO END HIS LIFE IN FULTON TOWER

Robert Benning, 17 years of age, who is under sentence of twelve months imprisonment for attempted burglary, tried to commit suicide in his cell at the Fulton county jail Saturday by taking, what he says, to have been a quantity of strychnine. He was carried to the Grady hospital under guard, where he was revived and placed out of danger through the use of a stomach pump.

Benning told a Constitution reporter that he could not stand the strain of imprisonment in the county in which many of his relatives live. He declared that if he ever regained his freedom he would never violate the law again. He was convicted of the attempted burglary of the establishment of the Kokomo Tire company, on Walton street.

MAYOR IS FLAYED FOR SUPPORTING CHOATE CHARTER

James Hollowell Says He Is "Attempting to Drive Dagger Into the Heart of Democracy."

COUNCILMAN NUTTING EXPECTS 12,000 VOTES

Expressions of Confidence Given Out Saturday by Headquarters of All the Three Camps.

Fifth ward voters at a mass-meeting Saturday at Hemphill avenue and Tenth street vented their attitude in stormy outbursts of applause, as a half dozen speakers in succession attacked the reform charters and flayed Mayor Key.

James M. Hollowell charged that the mayor "is attempting to drive a dagger into the heart of democracy."

Dr. L. N. Huff, stating that he had some important questions he would like for the mayor to answer, asked the following:

Dr. Huff's Questions.

"I want to ask if Jim Key wasn't on the committee that gave the Georgia Railway and Power company its present franchise.

"I also want to ask if Mr. Key didn't request the Georgia Railway and Power company to contribute to his campaign fund and they turned him down.

"Did he accept a fee of $1,000 to put over a certain political deal here in this town?"

Thomas S. Skipper compared his "desertion of representative government to the case of Benedict Arnold.

"Benedict Arnold had better sense than to have done what he did," he said, "but Jim Key has a head full of rotten principle and he can't help it."

Couch Scores Key.

Councilman J. A. Couch scored his domination of board of education affairs and his motives in supporting the Choate charter.

Among other speakers at the meeting were Councilman Claude Ashley, stand-pat leader, and J. E. Cumbea, representing the Atlanta plan of Councilman Edgar Watkins, and W. R. Biggers.

Mr. Hollowell said he recalled Mayor Key's words at a mass meeting held in Atlanta to bring about the election of municipal department heads by the people.

"At that meeting," declared the speaker, "Key said: 'As sure as God made little apples the people must and shall rule.' Now he is attempting to drive a dagger into the heart of democracy."

Expects 12,000 Votes.

Optimistic statements were given out from headquarters of all three charter groups Saturday.

Councilman J. R. Nutting, old charter leader, stated that "I do not

WALDRAVEN HEADS BIG SAFETY BODY

Gratification Is Expressed Over the Aid Given in Traffic Problem by the Pedestrians.

Expressing gratification at the fact that pedestrians of Atlanta have become "vastly more careful with reference to accidents," and announcing that it is planning to resume warfare against reckless automobile drivers, the Citizens' Safety association has just elected new officers for the coming year and is planning "something big in the way of accident prevention and education of the general public to carefulness," it was announced.

New officers of the association, which played an important part in the campaign against speed and recklessness during the epidemic of fatal auto wrecks and smashes last year, are as follows:

J. Roy Waldraven, president, succeeding P. Thornton Marye; J. M. Smith, first vice president; W. D. Hoffman, second vice president, and

DEMOCRATS POINT TO HUGE DEFICIT RAPIDLY GROWING

Astounding Record of Republican Administration Indicates New Jump in Taxes, Asserts Byrns.

BY JAMES A. HOLLOMON.
Constitution Bureau,
Raleigh Hotel.

Washington, May 6.—(By Constitution Leased Wire.)—Expenditures for the next fiscal year already authorized by congress, coupled with prospective appropriations, will reach nearly $1,000,000,000, so Representative Byrns, of Tennessee, the ranking democrat on the house appropriations committee, asserted in a speech.

Even at this time, Mr. Byrns said, the country faced a deficit of $768,000,000, an increase of $601,000,000 over the deficit six months ago. Items of $15,000,000 for rivers and harbors, $17,000,000 for hospitalization, $5,000,000 for the Liberian loan, $75,000,000 for the first payment on the soldier bonus, January 1, 1923; $50,000,000 for the ship subsidy and $65,000,000 for good roads must be taken into account over and above the $500,000,000 deficit recently estimated by Secretary Mellon, said Mr. Byrns.

Astounding Record.

"This is an astounding record for the second year of the republican administration, and in the face of its promise to the people last autumn that taxes would be reduced," he stated. "Although the republican administration takes credit for the establishment of the budget, little credit can be claimed for its enactment, in the face of these figures, by those responsible for its administration. In less than six months the budget administration has increased the apparent deficit for the next fiscal year from $167,000,000 to more than $768,000,000."

Claims of approximately $1,500,000,000, which Attorney-General Daugherty said a short time ago were to be placed against the government must be taken into consideration, Representative McSwain, democrat, of South Carolina, suggested to Representative Byrns, who agreed that this was true, and added that he had not included all the claims which the government would have to meet. There would be a great number of claims against the shipping board that could not be taken care of in the $50,000,000 to be appropriated for the

Seven Are Accused Of Raising $5 Bills To Aid Bolsheviki

Detroit, Mich., May 6.—Seven men declared by federal officers to have obtained hundreds of thousands of dollars for boshevik propaganda through a conspiracy to raise $5 federal notes to higher denominations were arrested here today after an investigation by the secret service that began nearly a year ago.

BOOZE FORCES SET NEW APRIL RECORD

Federal Forces Show 40 Per Cent More Results on April Raids Than Previous Month.

Showing an increase of approximately 40 per cent over March in the results obtained by the federal prohibition forces in Georgia, the monthly report of the department's activities during April was completed Saturday by Nieufield T. Jones, assistant federal prohibition director for the state.

Results were said to be probably large than for any previous month. The figures indicated that the prohibition agents were unusually diligent during the month.

Although the largest seizures were made in the vicinity of Savannah, raiders were busy in other sections of the state, especially in the mountain regions.

It is shown that 263 stills, 2,216 fermenters and 61 worms were destroyed by the government during the thirty-day period. Liquor was confiscated as follows: Whisky, 4,788 gallons; wine, 2,000 gallons; beer, 185,840 gallons; cider, 5,000 gallons.

The federal men also captured 17 automobiles, with an aggregate appraised value of $5,140. Other property seised and destroyed had an estimated valuation of $76,347.50. Prosecutions were instigated in 151 cases, and 108 arrests were made.

Taxes reported for assessment were $92,904.71.

Other seizures included two mules, one wagon, one buggy, 1,165 gallons of syrup and 3,500 pounds of sugar.

FIFTY-YEAR TERMS IMPOSED ON TWO AT MURDER TRIAL

Chattanooga, Tenn., May 6.—The jury in the case of Jasper and Luther Boring, charged with the murder of Sheriff I. A. Smith, of Bradley county, at Cleveland, reported a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree this morning and fixed their penalty at fifty years each in the state penitentiary.

HOME EXPOSITION TO OPEN MONDAY AT AUDITORIUM

Hardwick, Black and Key to Speak on First Night of Big Display of Real Estate Men.

The program for the formal opening of the "Own Your Home" exposition Monday evening at 8 o'clock at the Auditorium, will consist of addresses by Governor Hardwick, Mayor Key and Eugene Black, president of the Atlanta Trust company. A special musical program will also be furnished by a large orchestra, and a splendid schedule of events has been arranged for the entire event, which lasts throughout the week.

The "Own Your Home" movement, which is culminating in the mammoth exposition at the Auditorium, was originally launched in the department of commerce several years ago. The government realized the vital necessity for as many people owning their own homes as possible if they were to make good citizens. The program outlined by the department was never put into motion due to the outbreak of the war and restrictions on building operations.

Since the movement was revived in New York realty circles three years ago, these expositions have been held in large centers of the country where they had a tremendous influence in stimulating building and owning of homes.

Realty Board Endorsement.

The Atlanta real estate board, faced by the recent depression in business, extensive unemployment and shortage of available houses, took steps to start a similar campaign in this city the latter part of last year. A special committee was formed to investigate the possibilities of such a move, and the body enthusiastically endorsed the plan.

An "Own Your Home" committee was then formed by the real estate board, President G. Ward Wight appointing R. W. Evans, of the firm of Evans and Dodd, as chairman, and associated with him Oscar Mills, Ben D. Padgett and George T. Northen.

The exposition was promptly launched, and the wonderful display which is to hold the gaze of the visitors to the Auditorium all this week has resulted from the efforts of Mr. Evans and his co-workers, who have given weeks towards making it

KLAN CONGRESS TO MEET MONDAY FOR FIRST TIME

Imperial Klonvokation Will Take Complete Control of Affairs of Organization at That Time.

COL. SIMMONS SPEAKS TO KLANSMEN SUNDAY

Special Degree Conferred Upon Hundreds of Members on Top of Stone Mountain Saturday.

With thousands of members of the Ku Klux Klan present in Atlanta for the celebration of the seventh anniversary of the founding of the organization, announcement was made last night that the first meeting of the Imperial Klonvokation will be held at 9:30 o'clock Monday morning, at a place which will not be made public.

The klonvocation, it is stated, is the national congress of the order, and is composed of representatives from more than 1,400 Klans, representing forty-one states. Each Klan is entitled to send a delegation of one or more members, and these representatives bring with them the voting power of every member of the organization.

This Klonvokation is meeting now for the first time. It will assume complete control of the affairs of the organization, it was announced Saturday night by imperial officers.

Anniversary Program.

The anniversary program began on Saturday with a reception at the home of Colonel W. J. Simmons, imperial wizard in the afternoon, attended by several thousand members of the Klan and their wives, a parade through the streets at night, and then a motor trip to Stone Mountain at night.

It was announced by the Klan that 3,947 members left the Wigman by auto bound for Stone Mountain but that owing to the bad weather it was not expected that more than 2,000 or 2,500 would reach the top.

A special degree, which can only be conferred on members at the Stone Mountain site, where the order was organized, was bestowed upon a class of from 500 to 700 Knights, it was stated.

The imperial officers of the klan were all present at the exercises held on Stone Mountain.

REED RAPS WILSON, OPENING CAMPAIGN

Seeking Renomination, Missourian Says Ex-President Has "Thrust Himself" Into Race.

Moberly, Mo., May 6.—(By the Associated Press.)—Senator James A. Reed, in an addres here today opening his campaign for renomination declared that former President Wilson had "thrust himself" into the Missouri campaign through the letter he had written to The St. Louis Globe-Democrat, opposing Reed. The senator asserted that the former president was of a "dominating temperament and impatient of opposition."

The senator declared that Mr. Wilson was "the boy who is conducting this campaign in Missouri for the other side." Brekinridge Long, third assistant secretary of state in the Wilson cabinet, is the senator's opponent for the nomination.

Mr. Reed asserted "he drove out the lobby" in Washington and Wilson wrote a letter thanking him.

For Prohibition.

"But I suppose he has forgotten that letter, too," the senator added, referring to Mr. Wilson's denial that he had written the senator thanking him for his activities in behalf of the Federal Reserve bank act.

Senator Reed, touching on prohibition, asserted that the eighteenth should be respected equally with other sections of the constitution. Referring to the present administration, he declared, "it has laid down program

CHAIRMAN NORRIS WANTS RETENTION OF TITLE BY U. S.

All Proposals, Including That of Henry Ford, Condemned as Binding Future Generations.

TO ASK FOR MONEY TO CONTINUE WORK

Congress Not Likely to Decide Issue Now, But Wilson Dam Work Should Proceed.

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.

Washington, May 6.—Conclusions reached after more than a month's investigation of private proposals, for development of the nitrate and power projects initiated by the government at Muscle Shoals, Ala., were announced tonight by Chairman Norris, of the senate agriculture committee in a statement to the Associated Press.

After asserting his firm conviction that the government should retain title to the properties within itself for all time, the senator said congress in his judgment would not act at this session upon any of the private proposals for Muscle Shoals and all that could be expected before adjournment would be the authorization to continue work on the Wilson dam under an appropriation of $7,500,000.

It was his intention, Senator Norris said, to offer an amendment to the army appropriation bill when it was up for passage by the senate which would provide funds for continuing construction work on the Wilson dam by army engineers during the fiscal year beginning July 1.

U. S. Should Keep Title.

Belief was expressed that the senate would accept the amendment but would decline, because of its congested legislative calendar and the anxiety of members to return home for the fall campaign to take up for acceptance any of the offers pending in the agriculture committee.

"I am firmly convinced" the senator said in the statement, "that the government ought to retain title to all the property at Muscle Shoals in itself in order to permit the people to get the full benefit of improvements science may develop in the fixation of nitrates from the air. It ought not to bind unborn generations by accepting a contract made under existing conditions of rapid change in the art, particularly one which would extend a lease over the properties for a hundred years."

Future generations should have "something to say about the control of the natural resources of the country," the statement continued, adding that "it seems, therefore, that the bill proposing a government corporation for operation and development of the Muscle Shoals plants, or some similar legislation ought to be enacted; something along that line is the solution."

Improvements Sure.

"I am impressed with the fact that we are asked to make a contract binding upon future generations when we do not know the conditions that will surround the people during its life," said Senator Norris, "and that applied particularly to Henry Ford's proposal because it continued for 100 years.

"Improvements undoubtedly will be made in the art of extracting nitrates from the air," continued the senator, "and it is not unreasonable to assume that, within a few years, when these new processes are developed, that the methods used at Muscle Shoals now will be entirely obsolete.

"It may easily be that power will not be so important then in the extrac-

Would Rob People.

"Thus, a situation would be brought about whereby the people would lose title to a valuable resource, which was theirs by right of heredity and a corporation would be the benefactor.

None of the bidders binds himself to extract nitrogen by the method at present, if more economical methods can be used. None of the bidders will live much beyond fifteen years, and each proposes that the contract be carrid to its completion by a corporation.

"Whatever confidence we now have in the bidders, and that applies again to Mr. Ford, should not influence us in entering into a prolonged lease with them."

HARDING RESERVES OPINION ON BONUS

Washington, May 6.—President Harding took under advisement today, the modified house soldiers' bonus plan presented to him by a committee of senator republican leaders. He told the senators that he would study the proposal and the one to be presented early next week by Senator Smoot, of Utah, ranking republican on the senate finance committee, and would renew the discussion with them later.

Those calling at the white house, were Senator Lodge, of Massachusetts, the republican leader; Chairman McCumber and Senators Curtis, of Kansas, and Watson, of Indiana, members of the finance committee. The senators said the president had given no intimation as to his opinion of the amended house bill, but asked many questions concerning its provisions.

The president was told, senators said, that it was the desire of congressional leaders that no additional taxes be enacted in connection with the bonus and that it would be impossible to put a sales tax through congress. While no specific plan of financing the bonus was presented to the executive, it is the belief of bonus advocates that the legislation can be financed out of the refunded British bonds.

Ask About Bonds.

The president was asked by his callers, whether there was a likelihood of the treasury receiving the refunded British bonds sooner than heretofore anticipated. He was quoted as replying merely that the refunding negotiations are in progress.

Neither the commonly known McCumber plan, nor the Smoot plan calls for any considerable outlay of money, within the next few years and some senators said that whatever cost would be entailed could be taken care of out of the $200,000,000 annual interest on the debt owed by Great Britain, which that country is expected to begin paying this year.

The McCumber plan, like the house bill, would call for no loans to veterans by the government for a period of three years, but banks would be authorized to advance the soliders sums equivalent to one half of the adjusted service credit of the veterans. At the expiration, of the three years the treasury would make loans direct to the men.

Smoot Plan.

The Smoot plan contemplates the issuing of 20-year life insurance endowment policies to the veterans in lieu of all other options heretofore proposed, including the vocational training, home and farm aid land settlement, and it would make no specific provision for loans on the policies. The policies would have a face value equivalent to slightly more than three times the amount of the adjusted service credit of the veterans and the face valug would be paid at the end of the twenty years or sooner upon the death of the veteran.

After the senators returned to the capitol from the white house there was a discussion among leaders generally as to whether the bonus should displace the tariff bill. There was some talk about calling a party conference to decide this question, but no formal decision was reached and this may await the president's decision as to the kind of bonus bill he will approve.

SLAYER OF THREE IS FOUND GUILTY OF MANSLAUGHTER

Orangeburg, S. C., May 6.—Corlos Corbett was found guilty of manslaughter here tonight by a jury which tried him on a charge of the murder of Julian Copper, one of three men whom Corbett shot to death one night at his home near here two years ago.

The jury which was out for about four hours, made no recommendation for mercy. The verdict carries a sentence of two to thirty years at the discretion of the court. Judge Bowman, at the request of defense counsel, deferred imposing sentence until Monday.

Corbett, who claimed he shot in self-defense, showed no emotion when the verdict was read. He was acquitted shortly after the killings when tried for the murder of Bryan Salley, another of the men killed, and has never been brought to trial on the third case, that of Hugh Fannin. Jones Salley and Lewis Salley also were among the men Corbett shot at and the former was blinded while the latter fell to the ground feigning death and was the only one of the quintet to come through unscathed.

Corbett told the jury the men had fired dry sugar cane pumice in front of his farm house on the night of March 27, 1920, and when he rushed out in his night clothes to fight the fire they started shooting at him. The state claimed he had held a grudge against the men and had previously threatened to "get" them and that they were unarmed.

Waycross Makes Plans to Boost State Products

State Committee on Georgia Products Week Advises Its Plan as Best.

Waycross and Americus are setting the pace for the state in preparing to put over the Georgia Products week, May 22-27, with a whiz and a bang, according to the Woman's club committee in charge of the campaign. The cornucopia of Georgia's productivity will be shaken until its tail ravels to make the Georgia products displays complete. All that is serviceable or beautiful that comes out of Georgia's fertile soil and busy factories will be seen in the exposition halls and on the tables at the Georgia products dinners at which the week will reach its grand finale.

The Woman's club committee suggests the Waycross plan as a good model for other cities and counties of the state to follow to insure the best results.

The chamber of commerce started the wheel spinning at Waycross with a luncheon at which a committee of three was named to organize a steering committee which includes three members from each civic organization of the town. This committee called a mass-meeting which was addressed by Mrs. J. E. Hayes, of Montezuma, president of the State Federation of Woman's clubs, and Mrs. Newton C. Wing, of Atlanta, state chairman for the movement.

Work Is Specialized.

The steering committee has divided into eight sub-committees, each of which has charge of one of the following features of the Georgia products exposition: Agricultural exhibits, manufacturers from the state at large, county and city manufacturers, Waycross merchants, schools, churches, baby show, and flower show.

Another committee will have charge of the Georgia products dinner. Half of the proceeds from the dinner will be retained by the local committee. Half will go to the state chairman, Mrs. Newton C. Wing, to be used for scholarships for Georgia girls at the state college of agriculture.

The Americus chamber of commerce and co-operating organizations plan an exposition in an automobile show room in the downtown section which will include agricultural products, canning club products, which will be offered for sale for fall delivery, flower show by the Chrysanthemum club, posters made by the schools, and other exhibits of local and state products.

Boost Georgia Authors.

A feature of the Waycross exposition will be a display of books by Georgia poets and authors at the public library. This will include poems and stories by Frank L. Stanton, Joel Chandler Harris, Sidney Lanier, Cora Harris and numbers of other Georgians of the present and the past who are prominent in the literary world.

Co-operating in the Georgia products week movement are the state Federation of Women's clubs, Georgia association, Georgia State College of Agriculture, Georgia Manufacturers' association, Georgia department of commerce and labor, and others.

Hal M. Stanley, commissioner of commerce and labor for Georgia compiled the following information in regard to the state's products:

State's Textile Mills.

"In the textile mills in 1921 there were produced 228,000,000 yards of sheeting, Osnaburgs, duck, drills, denims and other fabrics including mixed, woolen and cotton goods; 120,000,000 pounds of duck, toweling, ticking, bed spreads, tire and other fabrics; 55,000,000 pounds of yarn and waste; 2,000,000 pounds of ball thread, sash cord, rope, twine, etc., and nearly 5,000,000 dozens of hose and other knit goods, while other industries closely allied to the textile mills, which furnished much of the material used in their work, also manufactured overalls, pants, skirts and ready-made garments for women and children, also awnings, tents, mattresses and bed springs. All the products of the textile mills had a value of nearly $128,000,000, while their allied industries added goods to the value of $5,500,000.

"These results were wonderful, when it is remembered that many mills ran on short time and with reduced force and yet produced manufactured articles that had values over half of those when prices were at full tide. Surely the people of Georgia can find out of these varied Georgia manufactures articles as good as can be produced out of the state.

"But the textile mills and their allied industries are not the only producers of manufactured articles worth the while of Georgians to purchase and to use. The leather manufacturers turn out good shoes and saddles and harness worthy of Georgia patronage.

Packing Plants Busy.

"The canning factories and packing plants in Georgia are doing a fine business with fairly good profits. Of course they do not yet equal this class of industries in states that adopted these lines of work before Georgia, but their manufactured products already run up into the millions.

"The manufactured products of our flour and grist mills and of those hat grind and also make feed for stock run beyond $16,000,000 in value. These mills help to feed not only Georgia people, but also those of other states, and the more than 700,000 people in Georgia classed as urban.

"If one wishes to build him a home, he can find ready, made in Georgia, brick, tile, cement, terra cotta, iron and steel, and if he designs a palatial home or noble building for commerce and trade and wishes for interior finish ornamental stone of the most beautiful kind, or for the exterior stately pillars, he can have these cut from Georgia quarries, properly shaped in Georgia and properly placed by Georgia architects and Georgia skilled and expert workmen. If a frame house is desired, the material for it can be had in Georgia."

ASKS RESTORATION RAIL SUPERVISION TO STATE BOARDS

Washington, May 6.—(By Constitution Leased Wire.)—Resolutions of the transportation committee of the Macon Chamber of Commerce, favoring legislation to restore the power and authority over railroads to the state commissions as existed before the world war, were today presented to the senate by Senator Harris, of Georgia.

Other resolutions presented were from the Savannah Cotton Exchange opposing any re-grouping of southeastern railroads so as to consolidate the Seaboard Air Line railway with the Illinois Central and Central of Georgia railway system.

WATSON AND FELDER IN HOT CONTROVERSY

the counts in the indictment, I was requested to proceed with the case.

Solely Responsible.

"I told my client that the case was a very important one; that my acquaintance in official circles was circumscribed; that I knew an attorney in Columbus, Ohio, with whom I had been associated both personally and professionally, who possessed in an eminent degree not only ability, but character, which entitled and gave him the confidence and respect of officials who had to do with the case. He authorized me to employ him. We proceeded with the case.

"Morse was pardoned. I, as leading counsel in the case, directed step by step the policies pursued by and with the advice of my associate. If anything irregular was done I am solely responsible. If anything irregular is charged to me by any one at any time I will take care of that situation. I dislike to take part in political bickerings and wranglings. I like a calm, placid life, but I have sat mute and listened to the vile and baseless insinuations uttered against this great and good man whom I personally know would not under any temptation so far forget either his manhood or his honor as to do an unethical, much less corrupt, professional act. I feel that even without his consent I must break the silence.

"Very truly yours,
(Signed) "THOS. B. FELDER."

As to the manner in which the Morse pardon was obtained, Felder said:

Manner of Pardon.

"Mr. Wickersham, the attorney general, sent to the city of Atlanta either three or five of the most eminent surgeons and doctors representing both the army and the navy. They spent two or three days there watching Morse and examining him. They returned to Washington and made a report that he would not last thirty days, if kept in the penitentiary. He was pardoned upon the recommendation of the physicians and surgeons of the United States army and navy. He went abroad and was gone for months, under treatment of the most eminent kidney specialists of Europe, taking the baths and so forth. He is still living, but my information is that he is still troubled with kidney disease."

Senator Watson has made no formal reply to Felder's challenge, but will probably make a reply on the floor of the senate early in the week.

CARAWAY AGAIN ATTACKS DAUGHERTY.

Washington, May 6.—(By the Associated Press.) — Attorney-General Daugharty again today was briefly attacked in the senate by Senator Caraway, democrat, Arkansas, and again defended by Senator Willis, republican, Ohio—all revolving about the release ten years ago from Atlanta penitentiary of Charles W. Morse.

Suggestions in a local newspaper that law violators were endeavoring to cause Mr. Daugherty to resign were presented by Senator Caraway, who said that "only two criminals" had communicated with him regarding Mr. Daugherty; these, Senator Caraway said, were T. B. Felder, an Atlanta attorney involved in the effort to release Mr. Morse from the Atlanta penitentiary, and Mr. Morse himself. Senator Caraway said he was not interested in embarrassing Mr. Daugherty and disclaimed any connection with such efforts.

"But I don't believe he is going to prosecute men of great influence, and I don't believe the people believe he is going to," said Senator Caraway.

Senator Willis said he was sure Senator Caraway's position was not influenced by persons running afoul of the department of justice, but Senator Willis said he knew that "forces are at work seeking to discredit the department of justice because the department is getting near to some people."

Senator Caraway also commented on the discharge from the department of justice of W. O. Watts, former special agent, for "disloyalty to the department" in divulging alleged confidential information to members of the house. Senator Caraway said that Mr. Watts' statements regarding delay in prosecuting war criminals were not disputed, nor was his honesty challenged.

Mr. Caraway also read from a report by Mr. Watts to Chief Burns, of the bureau of investigation regarding the affairs of the Virginia Shipbuilding company in connection with which Mr. Morse is now under indictment, naming E. B. McLean, owner of the newspaper which published the suggestions that law violators were seeking Mr. Daugherty's resignation, as one of the directors. Senator Willis said he knew that Senator Caraway's information was not accurate, and that Mr. McLean was not a director of the ship concern.

DEMOCRATIS POINT TO HUGE DEFICIT

ship subsidy, interjected Representative Davis, democrat, of Tennessee.

Means More Taxes.

The prediction that taxes would have to be raised next year in order to meet the heavy expenses was made by Representative Byrns.

"Must we expect that we will go along until after the elections next November, and then be asked to increase the taxes which the people were promised would be reduced?" he asked. "Are we to raise taxes or issue bonds? The president has not suggested what is to be done to meet the deficit, which may reach $1,000,000,000. The deficit of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, will be as large as the amount of money required to maintain the civil and military government in 1916, just six years ago. Certainly this must be given attention by congress and the country."

TARIFF BILL STYLED "MORTGAGE ON U. S."

ed and established, whether they approve that policy or not."

"The taxes must be paid by all the people," the report says, "just as those in the revenue bill must be paid by all the people and not by the beneficiaries who have demanded and got them. The people must not only pay the taxes on imports which go directly into the treasury, but they must pay the resulting increase in prices of all the things they buy and consume.

"Broadly speaking the views of the special interests who asked these taxes and got them, and of the people who pay them, differ widely in their appraisement of this measure and its effect upon the national prosperity.

"So far as the special interests are concerned, it goes without saying the taxes imposed are both satisfying and comforting.

Burdens for Posterity.

"On the other hand, the people view this bill as a measure full of mischief and dangerous possibilities, loaded with innumerable burdens for them and their posterity.

"When the Fordney bill passed the house the general public regarded it as a monstrosity so grotesque and absurd that they took it more as a joke than as a serious attempt at tariff revision. It did not excite in them any great degree of alarm, because they felt sure the senate would rewrite it, and they expected from this body saner action in their behalf.

"In these expectations the people have been grievously disappointed. That disappointment has grown as they studied the bill, first into surprise and then indignation at the audacity of the assault upon their pocketbooks and is finally culminating in a grim determination to resist to the utmost this attempted spoliation.

People Demand Truth.

"In these circumstances the people will be satisfied with nothing short of a full exposure through discussion of this attempted outrage, inspired by the desire to placate the subsidized interests at their expense. No conspiracy of silence, no threat of long sessions, no charges of filibuster or cloture must be allowed to smokescreen and divert the exposure of the iniquities which lurk in the tax-laden schedules and paragraphs of the 438 pages of the amended Fordney bill, an act (if properly entitled) to mortgage the country and its resources to the protected and monopolized industries."

HENRY P. DAVISON DIED ON SATURDAY

Prominent Financier Succumbs on Operating Table During Effort to Remove Tumor From Brain.

New York, May 6.—Henry P. Davison, member of the banking firm of J. P. Morgan and Co., directing head of the American Red Cross, during the world war, died about 1:30 o'clock this afternoon on the operating table, while surgeons were attempting to remove a tumor from his brain at his country estate in Locust Valley, L. I.

The internationally known financier faced death as imperturbably as he had met the problems of life. Known on the street as one who never showed undue alarm, he took no formal farewell of his family, and joked with his loved ones, while he was preparing to leave with his close associates two requests in case he should die under the ether.

His first request was that he should be laid to rest in the Locust Valley, with its rolling stretches of green and flowering apple blossoms that he had loved.

For Simple Funeral.

The second request was that his funeral should be as simple and unostentatious as possible. Those close to him, who tonight faced the sad duty of planning the final ceremony said both requests would be respected.

It was only last night that announcement was made that Mr. Davison, who went under the knife last August, would have to undergo another operation today. The first operation, performed to relieve pressure on the auditory nerve, which produced headaches, and insomnia, disclosed the tumor. Its removal was not attempted then because it was felt the patient could not stand further loss of blood and the anaesthetic.

He did not rally as well as had been expected, however, and the surgeons decided that another operation was imperative.

Bulletin Tells Death.

A bulletin issued about 2 o'clock, told of failure.

"Henry P. Davison, died today upon the conclusion of an operation upon an infiltrating tumor in the brain, which could only be partially removed.'"

It was decided to operate in the financier's home at Peacock point instead of at the Roosevelt hospital in this city, where the first operation was performed. A chamber was fitted up for the occasion, and this morning a special corps of surgeons and nurses began arriving in automobiles. As the hour for the anaesthetic approached, Mr. Davison seemed as unflurried as the time when, back in the eighties, a stranger had entered the bank where he was employed, pointed a revolver at his head and demanded $1,000. After detectives had pounced on the intruder, Mr. Davison had resumed work as though nothing had happened.

Two Anxious Vigils.

Two anxious vigils began when he entered the operating room. The family and many close friends, including J. P. Morgan, were grouped in another room at Peacock point. In the Morgan offices, were seated more business associates clustered around a private telephone connected with the Locust Valley mansion.

It was from the Morgan offices that word was first flashed to the public of the financier's death. The word came after closing of the market. It followed rumors current on the street that he had passed successfully through the ordeal and would recover.

Newspapermen assembled at Locust Valley were standing a short distance from the house when Mr. Morgan and others were seen to come out with bowed heads, enter their machines and drive away. Then a close associate of Mr. Davison's made the announcement of death.

Funeral Tuesday.

In a few minutes Mr. Morgan drove into the estate again accompanied by Rev. Dr. Charles W. Hinton. After a conference with members of the family, it was announced that funeral services would be held at 11 a. m. Tuesday in the chapel of St. John's of Lattington, the Episcopal church in Locust Valley, which was founded by the late J. P. Morgan, and in which Mr. Davison had been a vestryman for many years.

Rev. Dr. Hinton will direct the services assisted by Rev. Dr. Endicott Peabody, headmaster of Groton school, Groton, Mass., and father of Mrs. Trubee Davison, wife of the financier's eldest son.

Soon after it was learned that the operation had been fatal, Mrs. Davison, supported by her two sons, left the home and walked with them for over an hour among the blossoming orchards and flowering gardens of the estate.

"A Little Party."

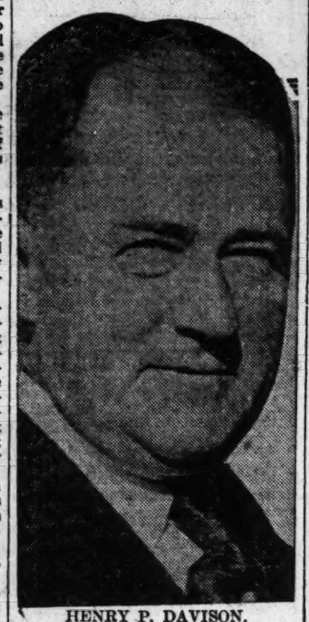

They followed probably without intent the course taken by Mr. Davison only last night when he made the rounds of the gardens to which he had become so endeared. In the afternoon he had gone driving with them, had chatted during the greater part of the ride and then in buoyant spirits had announced that the surgeons were coming for another operation.

Last night he played with his grandson, Trubee Davison, Jr., before starting on what was to be his last tour of the gardens. He walked up to one of his oldest employes and said:

"Well, John, I'm going to have a little party tomorrow."

But there were tears in Mr. Davison's eyes, as he wheeled and walked off, the gardener said when he told of the incident today. And there were tears in the gardener's today.

Until the hour for the operation drew near, the Davison estate was unguarded and open to the public, as it always has been. Shortly before noon guards began to appear and stationed themselves at all entrances. It was at the surgeon's orders, they said, because of the need for absolute silence for 72 hours after the brain was operated on. For several hours after it was learned the master of the house was dead these guards relaxed vigilance. A stream of automobiles began to pour into the driveway, bearing messages of condolence to the Davison family. Hundreds of telegrams were received during the evening until, at the request of family physicians, all but close friends of the Davisons were denied entrance to the grounds.

HENRY P. DAVISON.

Well Known Here.

Henry P. Davison was well known in Atlanta and throughout the state of Georgia. As head of the American Red Cross during the period of expansion for the emergency of the war he visited Atlanta twice in 1917 to inspect the then newly formed southern division. He was entertained at luncheon at the Capital City club, where he made a remarkable address before leading citizens of Atlanta who assembled to hear him. At the same time he addressed delegates from all chapters of the Red Cross in the state of Georgia. He personally inspected the work which had been undertaken by the Red Cross in Camp Gordon, Fort McPherson and at Camp Jesup.

During one of his trips to Atlanta he made the announcement of the then proposed one hundred million dollar drive for funds with which to finance the Red Cross work. None agreed with him at that time that such a drive was possible, but his judgment was vindicated when at the conclusion of the drive a considerably larger amount was realized.

"The world has lost one of its greatest men, and its greatest organizer," declared C. B. Bidwell Saturday. "Had it not been for Mr. Davison and his ability the Red Cross would not have achieved one-tenth of what it did achieve. Mr. Davison could size up a man in two minutes, and once having selected a man, he depended upon him absolutely."

NEWS RECEIVED WITH REGRET IN THOMASVILLE.

Thomasville, Ga., May 6.—(Special.)—The news of the death of Henry P. Davison was received with regret in Thomasville, as he had a wide personal acquaintance here, owing to his visits and residence on his country estate here.

Mr. Davison spent the past winter at his country home here, but except in arriving and leaving he was unable to visit Thomasville at all, and was scarcely able to leave his home, being most of the time confined entirely to it. It was understood when he left this spring that his health had not improved greatly.

Mr. Davison first came to Thomasville some years ago on a visit to L. S. Thompson, of Red Bank, N. J., at his winter home, near Lake Iamonia.

He was delighted with this section, its climate and hunting facilities and about two years ago, on another visit, he purchased the estate of Charles H. Thorne, of Chicago, some miles below Thomasville. This estate is a very handsome one, with a large home built in Moorish style and surrounded by several thousand acres of the best land in this section, much of it under cultivation.

While here this winter Mr. Davison, with several other wealthy northern residents, bought up a large tract of land, each taking the part adjoining his estate. Mr. Davison expected to make this his life-long winter home and came this winter hoping that he would recover after the very serious operation he had undergone. He was a close friend of George F. Baker, Jr., of New York; L. S. Thompson, of Red Bank, N. J., and othes of the colony of wealthy owners of winter homes in this section.

DAVISON'S WORK FOR RED CROSS.

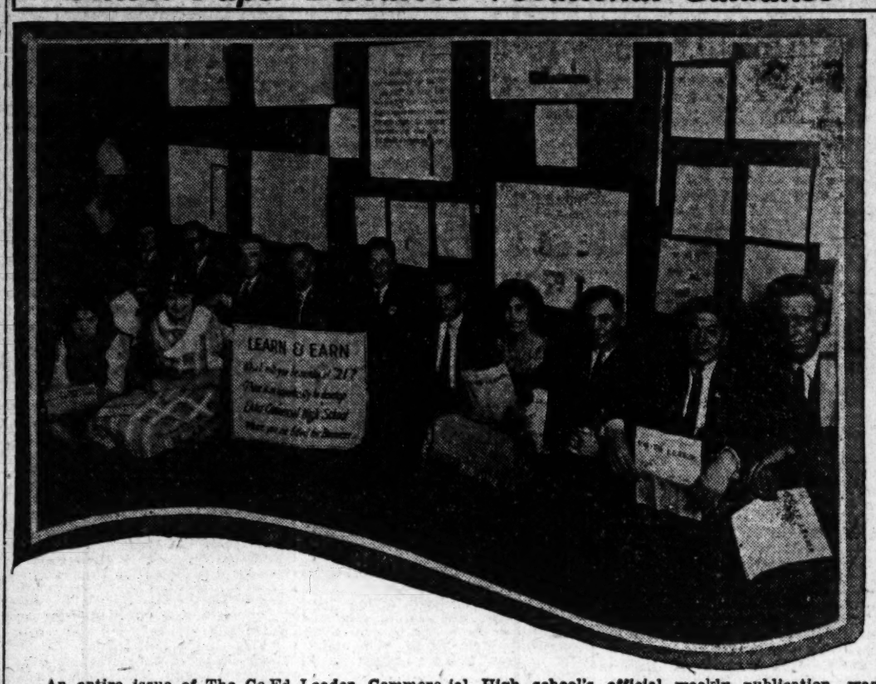

Washington, May 6.—Officials of the American Red Cross, who were closely associated with Mr. Davison during the war and are familiar with his work when at the request of the president of the United States he directed the organization's affairs in allied countries, spoke tonight in high terms of the valuable services he rendered.

"Henry P. Davison's contribution to his country and to humanity through his masterly direction of the American Red Cross activities in the world's greatest crisis will endure as a splendid monument to his memory." John Barton Payne, chairman of the American Red Cross, stated today.

"When Mr. Davison answered the call of the president he brought with him an experience in the conduct of great concerns that stood him in good part when he took upon himself the greatest burden any organization ever faced," said Eliot Wadsworth, assistant secretary of the association, who as vice chairman of its war council during the war was intimately associated with Mr. Davison.

"During every hour, from the day of his appointment to the armistice, he labored unceasingly'" continued Mr. Wadsworth, "and so created a new ideal of the Red Cross. When the actual conflict was ended, he was not content to give over his task, but through his leadership in the creation of the League of Red Cross societies, he made available to the nations of the world the practicable methods and high ideals that the American Red Cross had developed during the stern experience of war. The civilized world is richer for all times because of his vision and his devotion."

Schools Present Atlanta History In Big Pageant

2,000 Atlanta School Children to Take Part in Fete May 19.

BY STEWART F. GELDERS.

With song and sprightly treading of the maze of terpischore and legendry unfolded of the days before the war, with music and with tableaux, with color and with sound, Atlanta will have a chance to see her history presented in one immense and glamorous pageant by more than two thousand of her bright-faced, lively school children at the city Auditorium May 19.

The theme of the pageant, preparation for which has already been started under the direction of Miss Myra Graves, is to trace the inception and development of Atlanta's public schools in celebration of their fiftieth anniversary, which takes place at this commencement season.

The rafters of the Auditorium have trembled under powerful music and the faucets of its cut glass chandeliers have reflected gorgeous kaleidescopes of color, but if the plans and prospects of the prime movers in the anniversary pageant are realized, it will hear and see such sounds and sights as were never produced before.

STARTS WITH OGLETHORPE.

After some introductory music, episode I of the pageant, showing Atlanta's heritage, will begin with a tableaux of the meeting of Oglethorpe with the Indians in which the pupils of Adair and Stewart schools will take the parts of the first Georgia settlers and the Indians. Then will come a cotton scene with Eli Whitney and break down and clog dances, in which Ivy and Goldsmith pupils will appear.

The naming of Atlanta will be portrayed by Slaton school. Its natural advantages give rise to some magnificent symbolism. Peoples school will represent flowers and butterflies; Luckie will represent breezes; North will represent rain; Calhoun will represent fruit, and Greenwood will represent vegetables.

To symbolize Atlanta's water power Lee school will appear in the "Song of the Chattahoochee."

To emphasize the city's strategic position in the world of commerce, Highland school will represent its railroads in a May pole dance. Edgewood will represent the industries and Home the resources in a cotton dance.

Passing of Old South.

Scene IV will lend a touch of pathos and tragedy to contrast the happy scenes before. It will deal with the war period. First will come the spirit of the old south in a heart-tugging tableaux with Uncle Remus as the central figure. Oakland, English and Formwalt schools provide the characters for this scene. Then comes the "Rebuilding" by State school. Davis school personifies the "Returned Soldier," with Georgia Avenue depicting the widow and children of the soldier who did not come back. The passing of the Old South will be an impressive scene with Hill Street school.

Williams school will symbolize how the spirit of Atlanta was born in Henry Woodfin Grady's Boston oration. The Virginia Reel will follow each of the pictures as a refrain.

Episode II is aimed to depict Atlanta's achievements. The musical prologue will express the theme of the spirit of Atlanta. Decade one will show the "Three R" period of Atlanta's schools with Inman park children in the active roles. Decade two will mark the beginning of musical education, by Forrest avenue, of physical education, by Fraser street and of art, by Ira street. In decade three will be seen the beginning of domestic art, by Fair street, and of the Boy Scouts by Crew street.

Patriotic Theme.

The world war period is thrillingly pictured in decade four, by Battle Hill girls as Girl Scouts, by Milton avenue as soldiers, by Faith school as Red Cross, by Tenth street as war gardeners and by Walker street as liberty bond and war stamp canvassers. Moreland school will appear in "The Dance of Dollars."

Episode III, "Atlanta's Promise" will be worked out by the high schools of the city. In this titan tableau will be units representing love, law, liberty, service, science, literature, art, music and democracy with spring as a pervading note.

The grand finale will be a processional and tableau in which the entire two thousand participants and the audience will rise and sing "The Star Spangled Banner," as the curtain falls.

PLANS TO FINANCE MOVING PICTURES

Independent Producers Will Make Atlanta One of Leading Movie Centers of World.

Plans designed to make Atlanta one of the foremost motion picture centers of the world were made public Saturday to The Constitution by U. M. Dailey, general manager of the Southern Motion Picture Finance corporation, of Atlanta.

"Three factors make these plans possible," declared Mr. Dailey. "By providing adequate finance at a reasonable rate we encourage independent productions. By furnishing complete and modern studio facilities we further simplify the independent producer's problem and by guaranteeing distribution we complete the cycle and solve the entire problem.

Fifty-two Productions.

"Contracts have been entered into with several of the leading independent producers, and we will finance approximately fifty-two productions annually, many of which will be produced in Atlanta. A complete studio will be erected in this city costing one hundred thousand dollars and will accommodate four motion picture companies at one time. Well-known stars and directors are under contract and the production of pictures will begin as son as the studio is completed.

"Through our association with the W. W. Hodkinson corporation, of New York, one of the oldest and largest distributors in the world, thorough distribution is guaranteed."

Atlanta's advantages from a motion picture standpoint were also pointed out by Mr. Dailey.

"Motion picture production is largely a matter of climate," he said. "Last year Atlanta ranked second in the number of hours of sunshine. A city in Lower California ranked first and, like Atlanta, this city is producing no motion pictures. Atlanta abounds in beautiful parks and other natural scenery; the mountains and the sea are but a few hours distant and the buildings, streets and homes are more than satisfactory.

Atlanta Is Ready.

"An investigation of allied business interests shows Atlanta ready to supply the needs peculiar to motion picture production. Designers, costumers, decorators, furniture supply houses, builders, etc., announce their readiness to meet the needs. Ample hotel accommodations are available. In fact, Atlanta bids fair to surpass the famous 'Hollywood' within five years."

F. C. Monroe, vice president and general manager of the W. W. Hodkinson corporation, one of the directors of the Southern Motion Picture Finance corporation, will open the latter organization's campaign at the convention of the motion picture theater owners, of America, convening in Washington, May 8 to 13.

Much interest is being manifested by local business men in the announcement of the formation of these enterprises and Mr. Dailey has been invited to address several local organizations upon his return from the M. P. T. O. convention.

Offices of the Southern Motion Picture Finance corporation and the Atlanta Studio corporation are 220-222 Healey building.

PLANS TO PROTECT GEORGIA FORESTS NOW BEING MADE

Plans for drafting a new forestry bill to meet "the deplorable conditions that exist in Georgia," for presentation to the general assembly are now being made by the subcommittee of the state board of forestry.

A meeting of the subcommittee, which was attended by Dr. S. W. McCallie, Dr. H. G. Spahr, B. H. Stone and Mr. Butler, forester of the American Forestry association, was held in the offices of Dr. McCallie Friday. A general discussion of the report to be made to the entire membership of the Georgia state board of forestry in the near future was held.

Plans are now being completed for the holding of the National Forestry convention on June 6 and 7 in Atlanta.

Oglethorpe Players Please Large Crowd At Club Auditorium

A large and appreciative audience greeted the Oglethorpe Players Friday evening when they presented their annual plays at the auditorium of the Atlanta Woman's club.

The students evidenced rare skill in not only writing their plays, but in being able to interpret them.

It was indeed an all-star cast—and each role was enacted perfectly.

The beautiful new auditorium presented a gala scene of splendor, with the gold and black Oglethorpe colors festooning the boxes, which were filled with members of the Woman's board, to whose untiring efforts the brilliant success of the evening was due.

After the performance the large audience was entertained at a beautiful reception in the clubhouse, which was elaborately decorated with quantities of roses and palms.

In the dining room, where the ices were served, the Oglethorpe colors were again featured.

A large bowl of yellow flowers was the central decoration of the dining table, and yellow unshaded candles caught with dainty tulle bows, completed the decorations.

During the reception the Oglethorpe orchestra furnished inspiring music. This orchestra, under the direction of J. T. Lee, has become one of the finest college bands in the country.

Local Food Dealers Against Rate Raise On Grain Shipments

Following the action last Monday of members of the grain contingent of the Atlanta Commercial exchange in protesting against the petition of northern and western grain dealers to increase rates on less than carload shipments of grain, a petition was filed Saturday by the Atlanta Retail Food Dealers' association with the interstate commerce commission to intervene in the case of the Merchants' Exchange of St. Louis against the Aberdeen and Rockfish railroad.

J. H. Bullock and R. V. Bergen, president and secretary, respectively, of the local association, are signers of the petition. The primary object of the Atlanta Retail Food Dealers' association in the matter is intended as a protective measure for the small grain dealers in Georgia, whose business would be affected in the event of an increase in rates on shipments of grain in less than carload lots.

DOKIE CEREMONIAL PLANS COMPLETED

Preparations for the spring ceremonial to be held by Kibla temple, No. 123, Dramatic Order Knights of Khorassan, on Wednesday evening at the Castle hall, ninth floor of the Forsyth building at 7 o'clock, have been completed, and it is expected that a large number of tyros will cross the hot sands.

The order is the higher branch of the Knights of Pythias, and only members of the parent order in good standing are eligible to membership in the temple. It is necessary that all applications be in the hands of the secretary by Monday evening preceding the ceremonies, according to announcement made by Secretary B. L. Owens. The degree team, under the leadership of Lee F. Terrell, is ready to receive the tyros, and Royal Vizer Newman Laser will preside as the head of the temple.

MRS. MATILDA JOHNS FILES ALIMONY SUIT

Suit for alimony and a petition to enjoin the Central Bank and Trust corporation from paying any money on deposit there to her husband until after the disposition of the suit were filed in Fulton superior court Saturday by Mrs. Matilda Johns, who was denied a divorce Friday from William F. Johns.

Both Mrs. Johns and her husband, who also was suing for divorce, were denied decrees in Judge George L. Bell's division of the court Friday. Mrs. Johns charged her husband with cruel treatment. On February 9, 1921, Johns was ordered to pay Mrs. Johns $100 a month temporary alimony. Johns filed a cross bill charging his wife with infidelity. He named John Gelser, of 108 Juniper street, as a man for whom his wife had deserted him.

NEGRO MINISTERS MEET TO DISCUSS WELFARE OF RACE

The bureau of negro work of the board of home missions and church extension of the Methodist Episcopal church, under the direction of Dr. W. A. C. Hughes, of Philadelphia, will assemble representative negro Methodist Episcopal ministers and social workers from every large city in the country in a four days' conference here May 10-14, to study the task of the city church in relation to the social, economic and spiritual welfare of the negro race.

Dr. Hughes is in the city at present arranging the details of this meeting with a local committee, of which J. C. Arnold is president and Rev. D. H. Stanton, secretary.

More than a hundred delegates will be in attendance. Among the speakers will be Bishop R. E. Jones, of New Orleans; Dr. Charles A. Tinley, of Philadelphia; Dr. Pezavia O'Connell, of Baltimore; John W. Robinson, of Chicago; E. A. White, of Indianapolis; Bishop E. G. Richardson, of Atlanta; Bishop I. V. Scott, of Nashville; F. J. Handy, of New York; E. W. Kelly, of Houston; T. A. Robinson, of New Orleans; J. W. E. Bowen, D. H. Stanton and J. C. Arnold, of Atlanta.

Defendant Slapped For Hiding Evidence In Case of Larceny

A warrant charging assault and battery was sworn out in the municipal court against Ernest Buchanan, well-known attorney, after he had slapped Sam Levine, who was being tried before Judge L. Z. Rosser, Jr., in that court on a charge of larceny after trust in the alleged pawning of a diamond ring, said to have belonged to Mrs. C. M. Hightower.

Levine was slapped full in the face by Attorney Buchanan when Levine admitted he had picked up a check laid on a table by the attorney and hidden it. Attorney Buchanan produced the check "to show the court Levine was a forger," he said.

Levine is alleged to have stolen Mrs. Hightower's ring after the two had pawned it last week to secure money to attend a dance. Mrs. Hightower told Judge Rosser they pawned the ring for $2, and that Levine later secured it, and pawned it at a store on Decatur street. He since has redeemed the ring at the second pawn shop and has not returned it to her, she charged.

'Own Your Home' Exposition Day For Club Women

Wednesday will be Woman's club day at the "Own Your Home" exposition, which is being held all during the week at the auditorium under the auspices of the Atlanta real estate board. At that time, the home economics department of the club, under the chairmanship of Mrs. Newton Wing, will have special demonstrations in progress at a number of the display booths.

The club will also have a booth in the exposition during the week, in which will be featured the Woman's club cookbook, one of the finest works of the kind, according to cooking authorities, which has yet been issued. This cookbook, it will be recalled, was assembled by members of the club after exhaustive research and contains some of the coicest recipes of Atlanta's famous cooks and hostesses. It is a compilation of the best of southern cookery and has already won high praise.

One of the features of "Woman's Club day" will be a demonstration of cookery at the booth of the Georgia Railway and Power company. This will be in charge of one of the best-known cooks in the city, and is sure to draw a large amount of interest.

A woman's room will be fitted up in the lobby for the convenience of all ladies who attend the exhibition. The hostess in charge on Wednesday will be Mrs. J. E. Carlisle.

In the evening, H. G. Hill, manager of the retail paint store of the Southern Cotton Oil company, will speak on the proper selection of paints, the requirements of good workmanship, the care of waxed, oiled and varnished floors, and other topics relating to the efficient upkeep of the home.

While Wednesday will probably draw out the largest attendance of women to the exhibition of any day during the week, it is expected that a large proportion of the visitors to the big show will be women because of the direct appeal which the event will have for feminine minds. The vast majority of women dream of the time when they may own their own home, an dthe present event will probably be the means of furthering this dream by showing how simple a matter it is to build a house at the present time. The many exhibits are all arranged to show just how to choose a building site, an architect's plans, the many varieties of building material which can be selected, the latest and most advanced ideas in equipment and decorating the new home, and many similar subjects.

The exposition will open at 9 o'clock Monday evening, and will be open daily from 10 a. m. to 11 p. m. during the remainer of the week.

Charter Speeches For Civic League Of Capitol View

Addresses on the three charters will be heard Monday night at a special meeting of the Capitol View league to be held at the Capitol View Presbyterian church on Allene avenue at 7:30 o'clock. Speakers will be Councilman J. R. Nutting, advocate of the present charter; E. E. Pomeroy, representing the composite plan, and Edgar A. Neely, representing the Atlanta plan.

A large crowd is expected, as the meeting has been widely advertised, boy scouts having distributed handbills in homes. A musical program will include music by a five-piece orchestra, songs by the quartet of the Capitol Avenue Baptist church, and a solo by Mrs. Fred B. Beam.

WILL TAKE ORDER IN BOUNDARY CASE

Attorney General George N. Napier will leave for Washington May 15, where he goes to take an order of court in the concluding chapter of the long contested boundary line dispute between the states of Georgia and South Carolina.

A decision was recently handed down by the United States supreme court, before which the case was taken, establishing the boundary of the two states at midway of the Savannah river. Both Georgia and South Carolina had claimed the possession of the river, Georgia claiming the boundary rested on the east bank and South Carolina the west bank.

No further litigation is anticipated in the dispute now that the supreme court has ruled the boundary as midway of the stream, Mr. Napier stated.

COX COLLEGE GIRLS GIVE LAST RECITAL

The last of the test recitals to be given by the graduates of the Cox Conservatory occurred on Saturday evening, May 6, when Miss Lucille Wells of the class of Mrs. Mildred Harrison French gave her senior piano recital. Miss Myrtle Adams of the class of Miss Mary Lansing assisted Miss Wells, singing as Aria from Mignon, besides a group of songs.

Miss Una Mae Childs and Miss Theora Campbell of the commerce department, read their final theses on Personality and Business Efficiency before the faculty and student body on Friday immediately after the chapel hour.

The regular order of chapel exercises has been pleasantly varied during the past week. On Wednesday morning a musical program, arranged and directed by Miss Myrtle Adams, was given during the chapel hour.

On Thursday morning a most interesting program was given by the band from the Georgia Baptist Orphans' Home. This band, which is composed of boys from the home, has been in existence only nine months, and reflects credit upon the leader, L. M. McDaniel. The following boys compose the band: Larkin Abernathy, Lester Hicks, Earl Parker, Cecil Bennett, Marvin Thames, Grady Ewings. John W. Middlebrooks, Grady Fincannon, Hearn Powell, Sam Peavy, Guy Kirk, Roy Summers, Charlie King. Master John Ross, a diminutive eight-year old orator, gave several attractive readings.

Mrs. Richard B. Chase of College Park led the Y. W. C. A. on Sunday evening.

The Lanier Society has elected the following officers for the year 1922-23: Miss Verna Allison, president; Miss Elizabeth Beavers, vice president; Miss Miriam Edmonds, corresponding secretary; Miss Elizabeth Abbott, treasurer; Miss Margaret Thompson, critic; Miss Aline Greene, chaplin; Miss Ada Bert Stuart, sergeant-at-arms.

Vocational Students Are Given Barbecue And Dance Saturday

The vocational students stationed at Camp McElroy entertained more than 400 vocational students, who do not live at the camp, on the grounds of Lakewood Saturday afternoon and Saturday evening.

An old fashioned Georgia barbecue was served during the early part of the afternoon and was enjoyed by nearly 500 former service men, who are now receiving education from the United States government and who are stationed in various parts of the city.

All the men at Hospital No. 48 were invited to the barbecue and entertainment and many of the number attended. After the barbecue the students and their friends were entertained with a dance which lasted until a late hour.

The gathering Saturday was the first meeting of the former service men receiving vocational training in Fulton county and is expected to be followed by other meetings which will enable the men to become better acquainted.

TARIFF FILIBUSTER CHARGED BY WATSON

Washington, May 5.—Frequent and somewhat prolonged discussion today in the senate as to whether there was unnecessary delay in the consideration of the tariff bill finally culminated in a charge by Senator Watson, republican, Indiana, that there was a filibuster against the measure.

"There is no other object and no other purpose in the measures being adopted to delay its passage," Senator Watson declared. "The object is to delay the passage of the bill as close to the day of election as is possible. Nobody is being fooled and if I have my way we will be holding sessions daily from 11 o'clock in the morning until 11 o'clock at night.

Senator Watson, democrat, Georgia, interrupted to say that Senator Simmons, of North Carolina, in charge of the democratic fight on the measure, had asked certain minority senators to present their views on particular items in the bill, but declared that it was intended that the present action should be without filibuster and with no purpose of delay.

Filibuster Charged.

Declaring that it was immaterial as to what agreement had been made between Senator Simmons and his democratic colleagues Senator Watson, of Indiana, declared there had been unnecessary delay; that the "whole proceedings" had been for the purpose of filibuster and that so far as he was concerned it would not be tolerated in the future.

"If the republicans who are responsible to the country for legislation and who must answer to the country for their actions will stay here to the limit of their endurance we will quickly pass the bill," he added:

Earlier in the day both Senators Underwood, of Alabama, the democratic leader, and Senator Simmons, had declared that there was no disposition on the democratic side to delay passage of the bill. Senator Simmons said debate was inevitable and proper as the country should be informed as to the effects of the proposed legislation, but assured the senate that so far as the minority was concerned there would be discussions only of outstanding items in the various schedules. He opposed night sessions for consideration of the tariff, declaring them unnecessary except in an emergency.

Bonus Interjected.

The soldier's bonus also got into the debate when Senator Walsh, democrat, Massachusetts, asked Chairman McCumber of the finance committee if the amended bill was to be reported soon and taken up immediately by laying aside the tariff bill temporarily. Senator McCumber said this was planned and that he hoped to have the bill reported within a week.

"I assume it will not take more than a day or so to pass," Senator McCumber added, declaring an almost unanimous majority was behind it.

Senator Underwood conceded that a majority probably favored the bill, but told Senator McCumber that taking up the bonus measure would "seriously delay" the tariff bill. It would cause demands from other senators for action on other bills, he said, and declared that the republicans should not accuse the democrats of delay later.

"As sure as the senator pursues that course," said Senator Underwood "we will not pass the tariff bill until the dog days are over. Wait until the hot days of July and August and then don't charge us on this side with delay."

Georgian Joins In.

Senator McCumber replied that the American people wanted a decision of the bonus measure and he could not expect to hold the tariff bill before the senate to the exclusion of everything else.

Senator Walsh, of Massachusetts, interjected that Mr. McCumber would have some assistance from the democratic side in getting through the bonus bill.

Senator Watson, of Georgia, said the republicans themselves were responsible for long delay on the tariff, citing the months taken in committee consideration. Incidentally the Georgia senator discussed alleged reckless automobile drivers and traffic rules in Washington, the flow of the water of the Nile, Amazon and Mississippi rivers and other subjects.

BARRACKS BLOWN UP BY IRISH IRREGULARS

Dublin, May 5.—(By the Associated Press.)—The barracks at Castle Pollard, Westmeath, were blown up by the irregular forces, who destroyed the Mullingar to Castle Pollard by provisional government forces, and the barracks were blown up to prevent their occupation.

Two of the men who raided the bank at Buncrana, County Donegal, were shot dead.

A nine-year-old girl, one of the five civilians wounded during the fighting, died of her injury.

GOES TO DEATH DENYING GUILT

Hartwell, Ga., May 5.—(Special.) Will Ravenel, colored, convicted of criminal assault and sentenced to be hanged, was executed today. Ravenel made a short statement before the execution denying his guilt.

HARVEY IS BACK AT LONDON POST

London, May 5.—(By the Associated Press.)—George Harvey, American ambassador to Great Britain, who has been in the country most of the time since the opening of the Genoa conference, returned to London today. He refused to comment on reports that the Washington government had instructed him to make inquiries regarding oil and other matters of American interest which might come before the economic conference.

The British foreign office, since the oil concession stories and rumors have been flying about, has shown a keen desire to assure American inquirers that the British government has no concern whatever in oil negotiations at Genoa.

George A. Deibert, secretary and treasurer.

Meeting on Monday.

Secretary Deibert, in announcing the new regime, stated that the association is planning to continue its work with renewed vigor, but he could not state definitely what line would be pursued. The association meets Monday at noon at the Ansley hotel, and discussion of several proposals will be taken up at that time.

"We want to pay the general walking public a compliment," said Mr. Deibert, "for the splendid manner in which it has taken up the matter of obeying traffic rules and in doing its part and more toward making Atlanta's streets safe for pedestrians.

"The people are obeying the signal lights in the new traffic towers with highly commendable spirit, and I have even seen them stop and look for the lights when the towers were not in action. Atlanta is realizing the worth of these towers, and she is doing all in her power to make their operation a success.

"Safety zones, crossing lines and other traffic devices are being splendidly obeyed, and the walker is doing his full share toward keeping down the toll of recklessness. Boy Scouts are taking great interest in safety work and are taking its precepts into schools and homes."

Criticises Motorists.

Referring to motorists, Mr. Deibert said they do not deserve the praise that should go to pedestrians.

"While it may not seem true," he stated, "there has been practically no decrease in the number of accidents from the average of last year. The reason people have not thought of the matter is that no prominent man or woman has been killed recently, but that does not mean that careless drivers have not killed people at the same old rate.

"The information I have received on the subject comes largely from the newspapers, and from these I find that joyriders, intoxicated drivers and speed fiends are still at work and are uncurbed. The taxi driver, who has no reputation to uphold, is another menace to the general public. This does not apply to the large taxi companies, for they are doing good work and are co-operating in the safety rules: it's the 'wildcat' taxi that is a constant threat.

"If everybody did his or her part as well as the pedestrians have done, Atlanta would be a much safer city. What we want to do is to enlist the co-operation of every one and promote a city-wide sentiment for carefulness first and always."

KLAN CONGRESS TO MEET MONDAY

onel Simmons will deliver an address at the Baptist tabernacle at 3 o'clock Sunday afternoon, to which all klansmen in good standing and their wives and daughters when vouched for by klansmen will be admitted.

Preceding this address Colonel Simmons will bestow crosses of honor on members of the original klan and on members of the present klan who have won the right to such distinction by sacrifice or service to the order. These names have all been passed upon by the imperial body of the order.

Saturday afternoon Colonel and Mrs. Simmons held a big reception for visiting and local members of the organization, at their Peachtree road home, "Klancrest." The affair was one of the largest social gatherings ever held in Atlanta, and was featured by the attendance of a large number of wives of members of the klan.

Early Saturday night the klan held a parade through the business part of town, the marchers, as usual, being attired in white robes and helmets, with the insignia of the order on their breasts.

after program, only to abandon them, reduced taxes upon all the great trusts, profiteers and millionaires and gave no substantial relief to the people, its history to this date being one of broken pledges, servitude to the great interests and abandonment of the common people."

Defends Record.

In defending his own record, Mr. Reed challenged his audience to show that he cast his vote against any single measure that was based on the pledges of the democratic party. He asserted that he had upheld all measures sponsored by the Wilson administration as far as the measures were in accord with democracy, adding, however, that he voted against a measure whenever he believed it inconsistent with democracy.

In repelling the charge frequently made by the Wilson adherents, that he had opposed every bill advocated by the former president, Wilson, Reed enumerated some of the measures among them, as he terme.. them, "pet measurs" of the then administration.

Charging the present administration with a tendency toward bureaucracy, Senator Reed asserted "another menace which hangs over the republic is the concentration of power in the federal government."

Speaking of the Newberry election case and his seating in the senate, Mr. Reed said: "If we are to preserve this republic, then we must have regard for principles, not for dollars."

MAYOR IS FLAYED FOR CHARTER STAND

look for a large vote at the election, indications pointing to about 12,000 votes. This lack of active interest would seem to indicate that the people generally are reasonably well satisfied with the present form of government, and we believe the old charter will receive a clear majority in the first election, thus making a run-over unnecessary."

Hugh M. Willet, chairman of the Choate campaign committee, asserted that the end of a whirlwind campaign on May 16 would see the Choate plan the winner.

Councilman Watkins stated that the Atlanta plan campaign is in excellent shape and that the "progressives are quietly but continuously and effectively presenting the many distinguishing and good points of the Atlanta-Watkins-city-manager charter."

Fifth Ward Rally.

At the fifth ward rally J. W. Lindsey presided. He introduced Dr. Huff as the first speaker. Dr. Huff declared that if he had been a working man in overalls at the Southern railway shops last Thursday when Mayor Key made his speech there he would certainly have resented it.

"It was an insult to any man with common sense," he asserted. "The idea of promising to get 5-cent street car fares, $1 gas and cheaper electric rates with the Choate charter! The power of rate fixing is vested in the railroad commission, and it has never failed within the past twelve years to give the utility corporations everything they asked for. My experience with that body has turned me against commission government."

He called the voters' attention to the mayor's action in signing a resolution to increase his own salary $2,000 a year, then vetoing pay increases for other officials and employees.

"Mayor Key has built up one of the strongest rings at city hall you ever saw," charged the speaker. "He's kept some of its members in the background since the bunco probe, but they would pop up under the new charters."

Would Forget Charter.

Councilman Couch, the next speaker, stated that if Governor Hardwick should resign and Key thought he could be elected to his place, or if one of the railroad commissioners should quit and he could run for that office, he would forget the existence of a Choate charter.

He said he would venture the assertion that Hugh M. Willet doesn't know what's in the composite charter he's advocating. "There are only two men in town who do know," he continued, "and the mayor is one of 'em. I can see him in it. It's his kind of stuff."

Turning to the Watkins plan the councilman told the voters that Mr. Watkins has been writing charters ever since he was a boy and he believes the people are all the time looking for one.

He rapped the school board members. He stated that Commissioner Carl Hutcheson hasn't stopped making his motions in the newspapers, and added: "I believe he's scared of Mayor Key and McCalley.

"Poor Mr. Gaines."

"Poor Mr. Gaines," he continued. "I don't think there's a better Christian gentleman anywhere, but he can't tell you today what was the last voucher he signed, how much it was and what it was for. The poor old man is just letting the mayor and McCalley run the school system."

Councilman Claude Ashley followed and attacked the Choate charter as the "most iniquitous paper I've ever seen."

"The Choate mayor," according to the councilman, "will be the only man I ever heard of in the United States who cannot be impeached. Why, the president of our country can be impeached. They say they have the recall. The recall is a delusion and a snare. We tried that out here in Atlanta and we didn't recall anybody."

He reiterated his former charge that the charter is patterned after the German system, with its municipal "burgomaster." He urged the voters not to help tear down the present representative government of the city.

Thomas Skipper expressed the view that Mayor Key has fooled the people so often that he thinks now they have no better sense than to be fooled again.

"Representation is the only salvation of the working people," he declared, "and the hour has now arrived for concerted action by the voters."

Choate Statement.

Choate campaign headquarters had the following to say:

"City employes ought to support the composite charter in the coming election, because the composite charter gives them better treatment than the present charter or the Watkins charter.

"City employees have been solicited for contributions and are being organized, so far as possible, by the reactionaries opposing charter reform—on the ground that the composite charter 'legislates them out of their jobs.'

"This statement is untrue. It is the exact reverse of the truth. The composite charter establishes civil service in all departments and expressly places existing employes on the civil service basis.

"Under the present charter we have no civil service for city employees except in the police department.

"Under the Watkins charter we would have a civil service requiring applicants for positions in the city government to be examined by the civil service, but we would not have any means of protecting civil service employees against political removal from their jobs. A civil service employee under the Watkins charter could be fired without a hearing.

Defends Atlanta Plan.

J. E. Cumbea defended the Atlanta plan as furnishing the remedy for Atlanta's ills. He said the citizens of Atlanta have grown thoroughly tired of the way the government is being run and they intend to have a change. He spoke only five or six minutes.

Mayor Key issued a call Saturday for a special meeting of council for Friday, May 12, to declare the registration in Kirkwood for the charter election.

He and Councilman J. R. Nutting engaged in a warm exchange of banter over the charters in his office. The mayor took the councilman to task for the scoring Nutting has been giving him in public speeches.

The mayor charged that the reform charter plan was the councilman's own plan. "You came to my office and suggested the plan of appointing a joint committee of council members and citizens," he said. "You told me you thought 33 members of council was too many, that it made the legislative body unwieldly. I agreed with you.

"You introduced the measure in council calling for the appointment of seven council members and seven citizens. Then you came to my office and helped me to select the personnel of the committee. I made one change at your suggestion. Now that the very commission you approved has advocated the composite charter you pull away from your own plan and support the present charter that provides many of the features you proposed."

Statement by Watkins.

The following charter statement was given out by Edgar Watkins:

"I am compelled to go to the annual meeting at St. Louis of Southern Wholesale Grocers' association of which I am general counsel. I shall return as soon as possible.

"The charter campaign is in excellent shape. The reactionaries are describing the old charter as being supported by the Georgia Railway & Power company and the Choate plan as a means of re-electing the present mayor. The progressives are quietly but continuously and effectively presenting the many distinguishing and good points of the Atlanta-Watkins City-Manager charter.

"The Choate advocates have, temporarily at least, recognized that mere clerical errors in all plans will be corrected by the legislature and that the plan and not its amendments is the material question. What the advocates of the Atlanta plan desire is that the fundamental provisions of that plan be understood, and when these fundamental principles are contrasted with the composite and present charters, it is confidently believed that the Atlanta Plan, being the only progressive one, will be adopted."

"Under the composite charter, we would have a civil service requiring applicants to be examined by a civil service board, and would have an adequate method of preventing removal of civil service employees for political reasons. No civil service employee could be removed without a hearing.

"In other words, under the present charter a city employee can be appointed without regard to his qualifications or lack of qualifications, and can be removed to satisfy a politician's grudge or to make a vacancy to be filled by a politician's friend.

"Under the Watkins charter, the civil service protects the city against appointment of incompetents and political favorites, but does not protect the competent employees against political persecution, or removal to make room for political favorites.

"We believe the general public and city employees will both appreciate the superior merit of the civil service system in the composite charter, as compared with the incomplete civil service system in the Watkins charter, and the absence of any civil service in the present charter.

"Recently President Harding created a furor of national resentment by removing a large number of civil service employees in the bureau of engraving. There was no criticism of the work they were doing. Their removal apparently was inspired by political motives.

"The city manager under the Watkins charter could remove every employee in the departments under his jurisdiction, and neither the employees nor the public would have a remedy."

Haden's Card.

The Constitution received the following statement from Charles J. Haden:

Editor Constitution: Please allow me to make a statement concerning the report of my remarks on the proposed charters regarding the period of teachers' service necessary to class them as "permanent."

I stated that many young men and young ladies, after leaving school, took positions as teachers temporarily, intending later to study law, or medicine, or to enter other life work, or marrying, thus end their teaching career. Five years of actual teaching in the schools as a condition precedent to the benefits of being placed in the "permanent" class is, it seems, short enough and should be required. This for the reason that those who actually intend to make it a life-calling, should be preferred.

Agents in Atlanta and Other Towns Are Needed

A few weeks since I was invited to dinner in New York and when I was introduced to one of the ladies as "Manager of the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York, from Atlanta," she stated with much enthusiasm that the Mutual Life was the Greatest Company in the World, and that her husband, "Ed," shortly before he died, took out a policy with them which gave her $166.66 a month as long as she lived—not for a certain number of months or a certain number of years, but as long as she lived. I simply replied that she happened to be more fortunate than many other women whose husbands had not been persuaded by an active LIFE INSURANCE Agent to take out a monthly income policy for them.

The above is merely an illustration of what Agents are doing every day.

I am in need of several more solicitors in the City of Atlanta who can present the MONTHLY INCOME Policy to hundreds of men who have not made absolute provision for their wives and families. Such income can be arranged for $10.00 per month and up. See or write

SIX WIVES CHARGED TO M. L. TATHAM

Members of the solicitor's office Saturday were investigating the report that M. L. Tatham, under indictment on a bigamy charge, has a sixth wife. The information upon which the investigation is being made was furnished by Virgil E. Adams, attorney for Mrs. Dora Corbin Tatham, said to be the first wife of Tatham.

Attorney Adams declared to Walter LaCraw, of the solicitor's office, that Mrs. Ross Leach, 5 Simpson street, was present at the marriage of Tatham to Miss Mary Dixon, of Dalton, Ga., in October, 1908, and that she stated that there was a child born of the union.

The list of alleged wives, under the solicitor general's newly revised list, now stands as follows:

1. Dora Corbin Tatham, married at Walhalla, S. C., Feb. 22, 1905. Deserted with one child.
2. Mary Dixon Tatham, married at Dalton, Ga., in 1908, and deserted.
3. Eva Tatham, married at Columbus, Ga., Jan. 9, 1918., according to her recent letter to the solicitor general.
4. Lillian Morris Tatham, 57 Almo avenue, Atlanta, married Dec. 26, 1919, at a ceremony the solicitor believes was not genuine because the girl was said to have been deceived about being in the courthouse. She is the prosecutrix of Tatham.
5. Bertha Munro Tatham, married at Porterdale, Ga., Sept. 4, 1920, and deserted with a 9-months-old baby.
6. Ira Lee Brown Tatham, married in Atlanta Nov. 11, 1921.

Tatham denies that he has committed bigamy.

HARDWICK TO ADDRESS FOREIGN TRADE CLUB

Governor Thomas W. Hardwick has accepted an invitation of the Atlanta Foreign Trade club on the local chamber of commerce to deliver an address at 7 o'clock Tuesday night in the breakfast room of the Kimball house.

The governor has not announced his subject but intimated that it will be on a subject pertaining to the development of foreign trade in the state. His address will be followed by a round-table discussion by S. G. McLendon, secretary of state; Hal M. Stanton, commissioner of commerce and labor; Mayor Key and officials of the Atlanta chamber.

Invitation has been extended to R. H. Akerman, chief of the Latin-American division of the United State bureau of foreign and domestic commerce, who was a recent visitor in Atlanta. Mr. Akerman has consented to be present provided he is able to secure a substitute to represent him at the opening session of the National Foreign Trade convention, which convenes in Philadelphia May 10.

It is expected that more than 150 persons will be present at the dinner, according to H. O. Mitchell, chairman of the arrangements committee.

Georgia Heroes Seeking Health With U. S. Help

Training Center in Carolina Mountains Gives Soldiers a Chance.

BY STEWART F. GELDERS.

In the sunny hills of the Blue Ridge, around Waynesboro, N. C., 125 Georgia boys, wrecked by war, are engaged in another campaign with as earnest a purpose as they engaged in those of France and Flanders. They are fighting back to health and independence.

Most of the lads are "lungers." Gas and exposure left them, and the rest of the 79 students at the vocational training center, with badly impaired breathing apparatus. Against their affliction the army medical corps is using mountain air, rest, and the right kind of food. And against a craftier foe to recovery, discouragement, the government has deployed a staff of teachers and play directors to keep the student-patients interested with life and to give them good prospects of independence when they are finally cured.

Beautiful Surroundings.

Around the clump of buildings which formerly housed summer vacationers at the White Sulphur Springs summer resort, and several new ones built especially for the students, are wide acres of pasture, wire-fenced chicken corrals, orchards, baseball diamonds, golf links and tennis courts. In mountain brooks the sportive trout awaits the angler's fly, and broad stretches of woodlands shelter feathered targets for riflemen who a few years ago learned to draw accurate beads on more dangerous bullet-stoppers. All these attractions of the great outdoors are helping the 125 Georgia boys and their comrades from other states to fight back to the health they had before they donned the khaki.

The sports and outdoor divertisements are, however, secondary to the main activity of the training center. Each man, according to his strength, is assigned to studies for the vocation he likes best, and thinks he can follow with best success when he has won as signal a victory over his illness as he won a few years back for his country.

The center offers the following courses: Commercial, including typewriting, bookkeeping and secretarial work; cabinet-making and wood-working; mechanical and architectural drawing; machine shop, electrical engineering, agriculture, including beekeeping, poultry raising, orcharding and truck gardening; commercial telegraphy, including radio telegraphy and telephony.

One student, Dewey L. Cox, has won marked success in poultry raising, having recently sold a sixteen-pound bird to a Kentucky chicken farcier for $150, and as many settings of eggs as his flock can produce for $15 a setting. Other students are developing poultry raising on a profitable scale. The equipment is all provided by the government.

Less than 4 per cent of tre trainees have suffered physical breakdowns at the center, no man being permitted to do more work than a staff of one resident physician and two nurses judge him capable of doing with safety.

A student league council, elected by the students from among their number, enforces all disciplinary measures at the center. A tabloid newspaper is published by the students.

BARKER MAKES REPORT ON NASHVILLE MEET

B. S. Barker, secretary of the chamber of commerce, recently returned from Nashville, Tenn., where he attended the fifteenth annual convention school of the Southern Commercial Secretaries' association, held from May 1 to 4, inclusive. A total of 81 cities from Virginia to Texas were represented.

Headquarters of the convention were at the hall of the Nashville Chamber of Commerce, where a number of addresses were delivered by prominent men in industrial and chamber of commerce work. Among the speakers on the program during the four days were Dr. H. A. Morgan, president of the University of Tennessee; John Nolen, city planning engineer of Cambridge, Mass.; O. M. Butler, forestry expert, of the American Forestry association; Dr. J. G. Dyer, of Vanderbilt university; Governor Alfred Taylor, of Tennessee, and Dr. J. D. Blanton, president of Ward-Belmont college.

Mr. Barker delivered an address before the gathering on "A Junior Organization," basing his speech on the success that had been experienced in the organization of the Junior Chamber of Commerce of Atlanta. His address was received with enthusiasm, and was the cause of considerable discussion.

Delegates to the convention were entertained at a dinner at Ward-Belmont college, where a play and pageant were presented. The Fiske university jubilee singers performed for the secretaries.

PALMOLIVE OFFICIALS VISIT ATLANTA SUNDAY

Interested and interesting visitors to Atlanta today will be Felix Lowy, director of sales and advertising for the Palmolive company; C. L. Frederick, manager of the toilet goods department, and W. W. Gilgis, sales manager of the western division.

The party is making a trip to and through southern offices to learn first-hand something of the business conditions and to inspect the work of branch offices. The Atlanta office of the Palmolive company will be visited in an informal way by them on Sunday, and they will remain over until Monday morning to pay another brief visit. The party is stopping at the Georgian Terrace, and will leave Monday before noon for visits to several eastern offices.

HIGH SCHOOL DEBATE UPHOLDS ZONING PLAN

Members of the debating class which represented Boys' High school in the annual debate with Tech High were receiving congratulations from the members of the student body on the victory won Friday night in the annual debate between these two schools.

The debaters of Boys' High had the affirmative side of the question, "Resolved, That the city of Atlanta did right in passing the zoning system," and the three judges unanimously declared the debaters from Boys' High the winners.

G. W. Glausier, of the Decatur public schools; Professor A. H. Armstrong, of Georgia Tech, and Dr. W. W. Rankin, of Agnes Scott, acted as judges. Music for the evening was furnished by the Tech High orchestra.

Mrs Zadie Butler.

Mrs. Zadie Butler, 44 years old, of LaGrange, died Friday night at a private hospital. She is survived by three daughters, Mrs. R. F. Holley, of Porterdale, and Misses Alice and Bessie Williams, of Thompson; two sons, Bedie and Willie Williams, and a sister, Mrs. Kate Wilkes, of LaGrange.

ANNUAL MEETING HELD OF CANADIAN PACIFIC

Montreal, Quebec, May 6.—The forty-first annual meeting of the Canadian Pacific railway was held at noon Wednesday. A large number of shareholders were present. The meeting was of a routine nature. The address of E. W. Beatty, president, was as follows:

"The forty-first annual report which is now submitted for your consideration and approval, indicates in a vivid way the effect on your company's operations of the acute depression through which the business of the country passed during 1921, and it is a matter of gratification that notwithstanding the decrease in gross earnings of $23,619,000, the economies which were effected resulted in somewhat increased net earnings, and of course a slightly larger surplus after paying fixed charges and usual dividends on the preferred and common stocks. The results reflect great credit upon the ability of the officers and men of the company and are also a tribute to the physical condition of the property which permitted to the reduction of expenses without in any degree affecting the efficiency with which traffic was moved. During the months of October and November especially the heavy grain traffic was transported most expeditiously with distinct advantage to the company's revenues.

"The sales of agricultural lands were, as indicated in the report, small, due to the general depression and the absence of the immigration of agriculturists during the year. In my opinion, Canada can not afford to be without a definite and forward policy much longer.

"The Canadian Pacific for many years has been the most active colonization agency in Canada. Settlers to the number of 54,000 have been placed upon its lands alone, and the cost of the company's activities in land selling, irregulation and colonization since its incorporation has been extremely large, amounting in the aggregate to approximately $68,000,000, an amount in excess of the total expenditure of the Dominion government for immigration during that period.

"As forecasted in the address at the last annual meeting, reductions took place during the year in both rates of wages and in freight and passenger rates. The former, which became effective July 16 last, was equivalent to a reduction of 9.03 per cent on the existing payrolls of the company.

"The demand for further freight rate reductions is still persistent.

"It is the view of your directors, and has been their view for some time, that the scaling downward of freight rates should be begun with reductions on basic commodities, especially in those industries which have felt the general depression most severely.

"Since the publication of the annual report the board has lost one of its members through the death of the late Sir John Eaton, who joined the directorate on December 8, 1918. Sir John Eaton was in the prime of life, a man of tremendous persuality, influence and of extraordinarily generous qualities. His loss will be very much felt through Canada, and particularly in the city of Toronto. His counsel and assistance was greatly appreciated by the board, and his death is deeply deplored. The vacancy created by his death has not yet been filled.

"I cannot speak too highly of morale and efficiency of the officers and men of the company. A more loyal group of men does not, I think, exist in any corporation in the world."

The following directors, whose term of office has expired, were re-elected: Rt. Hon. Lord Shaughnessy, K. C. V. O; Sir Thomas Skinner, Bart., and Mr. J. K. L. Ross.

At a meeting of the board held immediately after the shareholders' meeting, the Rt Hon. Lord Shaughnessy, K. C. V. O., was elected chairman of the company; E W Beatty, president, and Grant Hall, vice president, and the following were appointed the executive committee: Richard B Angus, E. W. Beatty, Grant Hall, Sir Herbert S. Holt, Sir Vincent Meredith, Sir Edmund B. Osler, the Rt. Hon. Lord Shaughnessy, K. C V O.

Picnic for Friday.

All Baraca-Philathea classes of Atlanta and vicinity are expected to meet at Grant park grandstand Friday evening at 6 o'clock for an old-fashioned basket picnic. Notices of the event have been sent to all classes enrolled. A short program will feature the evening.

You Can't Trust Calomel at All

It is Mercury, Quicksilver, Salivates, causes Rheumatism and Bone Decay

The next dose of calomel you take may salivate you. It may shock your liver or start bone necrosis. Calomel is dangerous. It is mercury, quicksilver. It crashes into sour bile like dynamite, cramping and sickening you. Calomel attacks the bones and should never be put into your system.

If you feel bilious, headachy, constipated and all knocked out, just go to your druggist and get a bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone for a few cents which is a harmless vegetable substitute for dangerous calomel. Take a spoonful and if it doesn't start your liver and straighten you up better and quicker than nasty calomel and without making you sick, you just go back and get your money.

Don't take calomel! It cannot be trusted any more than a leopard or a wildcat. Take Dodson's Liver Tone which straightens you right up and makes you feel fine. No salts necessary. Give it to the children because it is perfectly harmless and cannot salivate.—(adv.)

Auto Association Will Participate In Prosperity Week

Definite arrangements were made at the recent regular weekly meeting of the officers and board of directors of the Atlanta Automobile association to participate in the celebration of "progress and prosperity week," May 29 to June 3. B. F. Ulmer, of the Buick Motor company, was appointed chairman of the special committee to originate and arrange features representing the work and activities of the automobile association, membership of which is composed of representative automobile accessory and tire dealers of Atlanta.

It has been tentatively suggested that a pageant be staged illustrating the growth and development of the automobile industry, showing conditions while the industry was in its infancy and leading on up to the present high state of development. It is possible that this feature will be put on in conjunction with the automobile parade being planned by the automobile clubs, as both associations, in many respects, are working along common lines in making the "progress and prosperity" celebration a success.

EXCELLENT FISHING AT ST. SIMONS ISLAND

May is one of the best fishing months of the year on the Georgia coast, according to local anglers, and reports reaching Atlanta indicate that splendid catches are being made on St. Simon's Island. Hunt Clement, of Decatur, who has been spending the week-end as the guest of W. R. Tucker, at Palm Harbor, made a very successful catch on Wednesday. Some of the fish were very large, one sheephead weighing nearly nine pounds. J. M. Hobbs, superintendent of the farm of the St. Simon's Investment company at Palm Harbor, also reports catching during the week a ten-pound sheephead.

A large number of reservations have been made for rooms during the month of May. Low week-end excursion rates just inaugurated by the A. B. and A. railway from Atlanta and other stations to Brunswick are proving very popular, and the road has also established through Pullman sleeping car service from Atlanta and intermediate points to Brunswick.

KEWANEE

Don't Sign Unless—

Signing the lease for a new apartment? We recommend it highly on one condition—that you know that there is a Kewanee All-Steel firebox boiler in the basement of the building. Overlook this pertinent point, and you are apt to become an Eskimo and wear your benny to the breakfast table.

With Spring in the air, and the birds and bees babbling busily, one is apt to be careless of the heating boiler. One doesn't want to think of winter till winter comes again. Then what? Why, it's too late to make a change and one is in for another season of coughs and chilblains. One is about to Eskimo some more.

And the tenant isn't the only one to be affected. Landlord will find that his tenants will leave him as rats desert a sinking ship. He will find that the renting value of his building is impaired. And the selling value has gone on a strike. All of you remember, please, that the heating boiler is the heart of the apartment house. Everything radiates from there, even the radiators.

About the best advertisement your landlords can write for your apartment buildings, is this: "This building is heated by the Kewanee All-steel firebox boiler. This means that heat, which is the spice of life, is always here in ample quantities and that even a lazy janitor can't stop it."

If you apartment dwellers want informing dope on this subject, drop a line to The Old Man Behind the Boiler, and get it right off the vine.

WALKER CONFERRING ON GOVERNOR'S RACE

Friends Say Strong Pressure Exerted to Cause His Entrance.

Clifford Walker, of Monroe, former state attorney-general and candidate for governor in the last democratic primary, was in Atlanta Saturday conferring with his supporters from different sections of the state relative to his probable entrance into the gubernatorial race this summer.

Mr. Walker stated that he was not prepared to make definite announcement as to whether he would make the race. A number of his supporters who called on him at the Piedmont assured him of their support should he decide to run, and stated that strong influence was being brought to bear on him to announce.

In the last primary Mr. Walker was defeated by Governor Thomas W. Hardwick in a run-over race, after John N. Holder, present highway commission chairman, had been eliminated. For the past several months Mr. Walker's name has been mentioned in connection with this fall's primary, and he is expected to make a decision within the next three weeks.

THREE GARRETTS WILL FACE TRIAL AFTER SHOOTING

Trial of Alfred Garrett, Napoleon Garrett and W. H. Garrett, charged with the murder of Federal Prohibition Agent R. W. Jackson, who was killed after raiding a still near Columbus, will begin in the United States district court at Columbus this week, District Attorney Clint W. Hager announced Saturday. Mr. Hager expects to go to Columbus Sunday afternoon to attend court during the week.

Agent Jackson was attacked from ambush, it is said, while returning from a raid. In a pitched battle between Jackson and his fellow raiders and several members of the Garrett family, Johnnie Garrett, a son of W. H. Garrett, was killed, and Agent Jackson was fatally wounded. Napoleon Garrett, another son of W. H. Garrett, was also wounded.

REFUSES TO CERTIFY BILL OF EXCEPTIONS

Judge John D. Humphries Saturday, in reusing to certify to the court of appeals the bill of exceptions in the extraordinary motion for a new trial for O. M. Howell, former city detective under sentence for possessing whisky, declared that he saw no adequate grounds for sending the case again to the court of appeals.

The extraordinary motion was based on the contention that B. S. Venable, a huckster, has made an affidavit to the effect that all of the liquor alleged to have been secured in the raid by Howell, Lon Terry and Griff Freeman was carried to the station house and none of it retained by the men.

The court of appeals already has denied a motion for a new trial in the case and the extraordinary action, which was denied by Judge Humphries, was filed in an effort to carry the case to the higher court.

THE ATLANTA CONSTITUTION

VOL. LIV., No. 329. ATLANTA, GA., SUNDAY MORNING, MAY 7, 1922.

France Will Await Belgian Approval On Note to Russia

Barthou Tells Lloyd George of Decision to Back Begium in Russ Disagreement.

RUSSIAN OBJECTIONS TO TERMS EXPECTED

While Soviet Reply Is Awaited, Rupture of Allied Powers Over Problem Grows Wider.

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.

Genoa, May 6.—France will stand with Belgium in opposing that part of the allies' memorandum to Russia dealing with the property in Russia of foreign owners. In consequence of this decision, which was communicated to Premier Lloyd George by M. Barthou, head of the French delegation, this evening, another crisis has arisen which endanger the conference and may or may not be settled before the British prime minister returns to London.

If the views of Belgium with respect to this article can be met—and it is considered possible that the Belgians may modify their demands to some degree—France will place no obstacle in the way of a settlement. The Russians, however, are still to be heard from. Their reply will probably be delivered within two or three days, and it is known definitely that they will present numerous objections to the conditions set forth by the allied powers.

Prime Minister Lloyd George, of Great Britain, and Premier Barthou, of France, held a conference at 5 o'clock this afternoon after which it was stated that their meeting offered no relief of the strained situation of the economic conference. Nothing will be decided definitely, however, it was stated, pending Russia's reply to the allied memorandum.

France Is Firm.

M. Barthou stated that France was firm in her decision to stand by Belgium and that he had been instructed in Paris to withhold French approval of the Russian memorandum until Belgium had agreed to article 7—formerly article 6—relating to the restoration of private property to former foreign owners.

While the head of the French delegation gave assurances that France wanted the conference at Genoa to succeed, belief was expressed in conference circles this evening that his firm position concerning the property question was likely to place the conference in jeopardy.

Mr. Lloyd George said after the meeting that the Russian reply must be received before it was possible to take any further steps to meet the Belgian requirements. There will be no conference meetings of any sort tomorrow.

Reply Expected.

It was still uncertain this evening whether the Russian reply would be given Monday or not, although it is expected.

Mr. Lloyd George and M. Barthou also discussed the proposed meeting of the powers signatory to the treaty of Versailles to discuss German reparations that are due May 31. The French chief delegate stated that France was not prepared to discuss reparations until after May 31, when it will be known, whether the Germans will default in payments due on that date.

This attitude, it is generally believed is indicative of France's intention to handle reparations matters alone as was indicated by Premier Poincare in his recent address at Bar-Le-Duc.

Constant Divergence.

The offcil French narrative of today's happenings not only shows that the conference is endangered, but also indicates a distant divergence of views between France and England, tending to emphasize the differences that have frequently arisen between them during the conference.

The British premier, in his meeting with M. Barthou, refused to agree to any further modification of the memorandum, which already is in the hands of the Russian delegation.

M. Barthou first saw the Italian foreign minister, Signor Schanzer, and found him busy trying to frame a formula on the question of property rights in Russia which would satisfy everybody and avoid a rupture of the conference.

Schanzer Is Pacifier.

"Even if a break comes," Signor Schanzer is quoted by the French as saying, "there will be no reason for relaxing the bonds of friendship which have always bound and must binc the allies together."

Signor Schanzer then referred to the provisions of the Cannes' resolution and emphasized that they made it clear that Russia would be given the right to establish such administration of property within her boundaries as she wished. The problem was to reconcile this right with suitable guarantee that foregners' property would be respected.

How to harmonize these two things so as to please everybody, the Italian

PUBLIC SERVICE COMPANIES PAY $5,044,504 TAX

Big Sum Contributed to Support of State by 222 Corporations, Rail Commission Shows.

DECREASE IS NOTED IN FATAL ACCIDENTS

Total of 1,682 Persons Killed or Injured in 1921, as Against 2,777 in the Year 1920.

A total of $5,044,504.60 in texas was paid into the state treasury during 1921 by 222 public service corporations, according to the annual report of the Georgia railroad commission filed with Governor Hardwick Saturday. Compared with the total taxes paid by these concerns in 1917 the 1921 report shows an increase in the last five years of $4,418,820.

More than half, or $2,904,330.59 of this amount was paid into the treasury by steam railroad operating within the boundaries of the state. The next largest item includes the returns from street railways, gas, electric light and power companies which contributed in taxes a total of $1,503,054.36. Cotton compress companies paid in $190,661.86; terminal companies, $58,098.22; telegraph companies, $64,176.51; and express companies, $19,963.64.

"In a general way," the report read, "It may be stated that Georgia public service, corporations, like all other business enterprises, have felt the nation-wide depression and cannot be said to have experienced a prosperous year."

List of Corporations.

The 222 public service corporations listed in the report are divided as follows: Telephone companies, 101; steam railroads, 53; street railways, gas electric light and power companies, 44; cotton compress companies, 15; terminal companies, 5; express and telegraph companies, 2 each. This number compares with 228 in 1920, showing a decrease of 6, which either

INMANS ARE HURT IN AUTO ACCIDENT

Mrs. Inman Suffers Broken Collarbone and Two Broken Ribs When Car Turns Turtle.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Inman, of 1060 Peachtree road, had miraculous escapes from death Saturday afternoon at 12 o'clock when the automobile in which they were going to Augusta on a week-end visit, turned over as it skidded in a small puddle of water between Social Circle and Rutledge. Mrs. Inman suffers a broken collarbone, two broken ribs and a fractured leg in addition bruises about the body. Mr. Inman escaped without any serious injuries, only suffering bruises and lacerations about the body.

Mrs. Inman was brought to Atlanta and taken to Davis-Fischer sanitarium. Physicians stated that they would not know until a more thorough examination had been made whether Mrs. Inman's injuries would prove fatal.

Mr. Inman stated that he did not see the small puddle of water in time to prevent the car from skidding.

At the time of the accident there was no one in sight to offer aid, and Mr. Inman carried Mrs. Inman to a nearby house where she was given first-aid treatment pending the arrival of physicians from Rutledge. Upon learning that a fast train passed through Rutledge at 3 o'clock, Mr. Inman wired and had the train stop so Mrs. Inman could be rushed to Atlanta for medical treatment. Mrs. Inman regained consciousness shortly after being put on the train en route to Atlanta.

Mrs. Inman is one of the most prominent club women and society leaders in Atlanta and has been identified with all civic undertakings of past several years. Mr. Inman is one of Atlanta's leading cotton buyers and a leader in putting over the recent improvement bonds.

Beautiful May Day Fete Held at Agnes Scott

Above are performers who appeared in the Agnes Scott May day celebration. On the left is Miss Margaret Prowell, who played the role of Pan. In the group are the Misses Buchanan, Peck, Hyde, Guille, Comfort, Formby and Thompson, who appeared as dancers.

A beautiful May day celebration was held on the lawn of Agnes Scott college Saturday afternoon, with a large audience present. The weather was perfect for the event and the program was carried out to the vast enjoyment of the large number of spectators.

The scenario for the May day performance, written by Miss Nell Esslinger, gave a pictorial delineation of the story of Pan and Syrinx, as told by the myths of the ancient Greeks.

Syrinx is a beautiful nymph with whom the god Pan falls in love. She repulses him, but he persists in his ardent attentions and in desperation she appeals to the goddess Diana for protection.

Diana changes the nymph into a clump of reeds, which she makes sacred to the vestal virgins. This transformation fails to free her from the unwelcome devotion of the god Pan, who fashions his far-famed pipes from the reeds.

At last Diana changes Syrinx into a mortal and sends her to a village for human companionship. Here she shrinks from the village folk, who are very gay and carefree and accustomed to revelry, until she meets the youth, Thalius, who catches her fancy. The performance closes with a processional of all the characters.

Miss Ruth Keiser took the part of Syrinx, while Miss Margaret Prowell appeared as the woodland god Pan. Miss Caroline Moore took the part of Diana and Miss Sarah Till of Thalius.

Miss Louise Lewis, head of the Agnes Scott art department, collaborated with members of the committee on arrangements in making the performance artistic in detail and in color scheme. C. W. Diekman composed the music for the occasion, while the dances and pantomime were handled by the Misses Randolph and Wilburn, of the department of physical education.

The occasion brought to the campus a throng of alumnae and friends of the college, including the faculty of Emory university, which manifested great interest in the classical pageant.

A., B. & A. PURCHASE MOVE GAINS FAVOR

Legislators and Prominent Business Men to Take Part in Big Moultrie Meeting.

The state-wide meeting to be held Tuesday, May 16, at Moultrie in behalf of saving the Atlanta, Birmingham and Atlantic railroad from being junked, promises to be one of the biggest events of its kind ever held in the state.

Mayor Key, of Atlanta, who is president of the association for state ownership of the road, has received many letters and telegrams during the past two days from prominent people all over the state expressing their hearty approval of the movement, and signifying their intention of attending the meeting.

Moultrie is making preparations to handle a monster crowd. The plan to have the state take over the A., B. & A. rather than see its rails taken up, its rolling stock sold and a rich section of Georgia deprived of its railroad facilities, is meeting with great favor, it is stated.

Purpose of Organization.

It is not the purpose of the association to have the state buy the railroad, it is explained, unless when the road is put up for sale there are no bidders for the property. It is the plan of the association to have the state issue bonds so that in event nobody makes an offer for the A., B. & A., the state can buy it so as to protect its own interests and save those cities, towns and counties through which the railroad runs.

Mayor Key has invited Governor Hardwick to be one of the principal speakers at the meeting, at which further plans to promote the bond issue will be made. Invitations have been extended to every member of the legislature, all statehouse officers, mayors of all cities in Georgia, and to county commissioners of all counties to attend.

Among those invited to address the meeting are Senator Frank Manson, of Jonesboro; Johnny Jones, of LaGrange; Cecil Neil, speaker of the house; George H. Carswell, of Wilkinson; J. W. Culpepper, of Fayette; A. J. Perryman, of Talbot; Howard J. Ennis, of Baldwin; B. F. Mann, of Glynn; E. H. McMichael, of Marion.

Favor Shown Project.

Many members of the house and senate have expressed themselves as favorable to the plan, and the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce has unanimously indorsed the movement, and pledged its best effort to aid in saving the A., B. & A., it is declared. Similar action will be taken by city councils, chambers of commerce and boards of county commissioners in the territory traversed and served by the railroad, it is expected.

In addition to Mayor Key, who will preside over the meeting, a large delegation of Atlanta citizens will leave on the night of May 15 to be present on the following day.

Floyd County Board Of Tax Equalizers Quits

Special Investigator Also Quits When Sufficient Funds Are Refused for Work.

Rome, Ga., May 6.—(Special.)—The board of tax equalizers of Floyd county resigned in a body this afternoon, when told by County Attorney Maddox that they are allowed by law only $3 a day for clerical help and a small daily stipend for themselves, and that during the fifty days a year when they are in session must give the entire day to tax matters. The tax investigator also resigned because the county attorney told him he is allowed only $3 a day for his services. His duty is to discover taxes that have not been returned or where the value of the property as returned is not considered equitable.

The action of the equalizers created a sensation and their successors were not appointed. They returned to the tax receiver the tax books which had been turned over to them by him last week.

No Authority.

Last year the bill for clerical help employed by the equalizers had aggregated a large sum, and the present county attorney ruled yesterday that no authority is given to the equalizers by the state law to employ clerical help except within the sum of $3 a day.

The equalizers said that one man could not do the clerical work and even if he could they could not employ a competent person for so small a wage.

The board of equalizers was composed of J. S. Berryhill, chairman; W. H. H. Camp and Hughes T. Reynolds. Judge John P. Davis was the tax discoverer.

In Writing.

The resignation of Equalizer Reynolds was in writing and stated that he was unwilling to hold the office because under the ruling of the county attorney he considered that the county is not providing sufficient means or machinery for the work of the equalizers.

His resignation was made before he knew that the other members of the board intended to resign.

WANT UNIVERSAL RELIGIOUS COURSE

Methodist Conference Resolution Asks Religious Training in All Colleges and Schools in U. S.

Hot Springs, Ark., May 6.—(Special.)—Bishop James Cannon, president of the educational commission, announced tonight that the following resolution will be introduced at the session of the general conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, south, on next Monday morning:

"Resolution on religious instruction in schools:

"Resolved: That this general conference places upon record its deliberate and positive conviction that moral and religious instruction should be given in every department of the public school system of our country, primary, grammar and high school grades, colleges and universities, such instruction to be given without cost to state in the lower grades and to be offered as optional courses in colleges and universities, such optional courses when completed to be given equal credit with other courses of equal intellectual and cultural value.

"Second, that our general board of education is hereby instructed to give careful study to this great and fundamental question, to confer with other church boards on education, with the officers of the federal council of the churches of Christ in America, and with state educational authorities, and to develop a definite program for moral and religious training in the primary, grammar and high school grades of our public schools and optional courses in such subjects in state colleges and unversities and without interfering in any way upon any constitutional provisions for separation of church and state, to put forward all proper efforts to secure the adoption of such programs."

Conference Thrilled.

The general conference this morning was deeply moved by a highly insipirational devotional conducted by Bishop Collins Denny, of Richmond, Va.

Dr. J. H. Eakes, of Atlanta, has been appointed by the college of bishops, as a member of the special committee of fifteen to investigate the feasibility of merging some of the general boards.

Dr. J. E. Dickey, of Griffin, and Dr. Plato Durham, of Atlanta, were appointed as members of the committee to consider constitutional questions.

Appropriate resolutions of appreciation concerning the senior book agent, D. M. Smith, of Nashville, Tenn., who has been ill for some time, were passed.

"Non-Concurrence" Reports.

Dr. T. D. Ellis, of Macon, moved that reports of committees marked "non-concurrence" be made. The memorial from the Alabama conference that the presiding elders' salaries be fixed at a stated amount instead of a

Child Crusaders Plan Daily Calls At White House

Washington, May 5.—Inauguration of what was announced by leaders as "a daily peaceful petition to the president" for release of imprisoned war-law violators, the score or more of women and children composing the "children's crusade," led by Kate Richards O'Hare, called today at the white house offices. They were received by Secretary Christian and through him presented a request to see President Harding.

Mrs. O'Hare, on arriving at the white house, said the group would call there daily at 2:15 p. m. until the president granted a hearing or until Attorney-General Daugherty took some action on the request for general amnesty for war violators.

MARKET BUILDING FOR MANSION SITE

230-Foot Section of State Property to Be Rented for $10,000 Rental for First Ten Years.

Lease of a 230-foot section of the governor's mansion property at Peachtree and Cain streets, fronting on Cain street, has been agreed upon to run for fifty years to the Capital City Building and Market company, of which Paul F. Vose is president, for the erection of a private market building which will cost approximately $400,000. The consideration to be named in the lease is a yearly rental of $10,000 for the first ten years, increasing $2,500 each succeeding ten-year period for the entire fifty years, according to Mr. Vose.

A lot seventy-five feet deep, fronting on Peachtree, has been reserved by Ben Massell, who recently leased the entire property from the state, and this is not included in the section to be leased.

Temporarily a park will occupy the front of the mansion site, through which a fifteen-foot walk will afford an entrance for pedestrians from Peachtree street into the market, and, although the Massell Realty company plans to erect a building on this space later, the entrance will be kept open permanently. An arcade entrance is also provided from Spring street through the International building now under construction. An automobile driveway, with both entrance and exit on Cain street, will encircle the building, in addition to the main entrance, and will provide parking space under cover.

Plan Handsome Building.

The market building, according to Mr. Vose, will be one of the finest in the south and will be similar to markets already in operation in Seattle, Los Angeles, Detroit, Cleveland, Toledo, Lexington, Ky., and in other cities. It will be of concrete and steel construction, finished inside with white vitrolite, mahogany and nickel. It will accommodate approximately fifty merchants, each one a specialist in his line. It will be three stories high, the top floor being a refrigerated auditorium and banquet hall, 70x146 feet, which will accommodate a banquet at which approximately 1,000 people may be seated.

The market building was originally planned to occupy the site at Auburn avenue and Ivy street, and plans were drawn for its construction there. However, when the governor's mansion site became available, through its lease to Mr. Massell, the Auburn avenue location was abandoned and negotiations were begun for the governor's mansion site. Some alterations on the plans were necessary in order to make the building fit the new site, and detailed plans are now nearing completion by Robert and Company, architects and engineers.

Although some delay was occasioned by the change in location of the market building, it is planned by the new company to begin construction within the next sixty or ninety days.

Complete Equipment.

Every bit of food for sale in the building will be displayed under glass, and all perishable articles will be under refrigeration. The basement of the building will be given over to

Premier of China Is Facing Arrest After Wu Victory

President Hsu Dismisses Premier and Cabinet Members and Orders Their Arrest.

NO FOREIGNERS HURT IN BRIEF CIVIL WAR

Defeated Forces of General Chang Are Roaming Country, Seeking Railroad for Northern Homes.

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.

Pekin, May 6.—Sweeping governmental changes, followed today the success of General Wu Pei-Fu in winning the military mastery at Pekin.

President Hsu Shih-Chang issued a mandate dismissing Premier Liang Shih-Yi, and ordering his arrest.

Finance Minister Chang Hu and Minister of Communications Yeh Kung-Cho also were dismissed and their arrest was ordered.

General Chang Tso-Lin, the Manchuria leader, defeated by Wu in the campaign just ended, is dismissed from his office of inspector general of Manchuria.

Charge Against Premier.

Premier Liang Shih-Yi, who is now in Tientsin where he has been on leave for several months, is charged with conniving with Chang Tso-Li to promote civil war.

General Wu declared today at Changsintien that instead of striving for the position of head of the government he desired to devote his energies to unifying China, to create political harmony in the north and south, abolish militarism, revive industry and win the respect of the foreigner powers.

He expressed himself as agreeing with the opinion of the powers set down at the Washington conference that China must put her house in order, free herself from vast armies, apply her revenues to pay her debts and build railroads.

Greets Anglo-Saxons.

Wu Pei-Fu greeted a group of Americans and British who visited his private train twelve miles outside of Pekin. As the visitors approached, General Wu appeared on the steps of his car dressed in simple uniform without insignia of rank. About the train were scattered tons of ammunition and guns captured from Chang's army. On the platform numerous wounded soldiers were stretched, while behind the station were gathered about forty camels, which had been used to convey the mountain guns.

General Wu was asked whether he intended entering Pekin to assume the direction of the government. He replied he was not interestd in politics because of more serious questions. First of all he did not consider that his victory was complete until he had captured Tso-Lin, whom he desired to eliminate as a possible future menace. He favored disarming most of the soldiers, but wanted a reasonable defensive army to represent united China against foreign enemies.

China's civil war appears to have ended with the flight of General Chang toward Mukden, and the recognition of the Pekin government of General Wu as the master of the situation.

Chang, who brought 100,000 troops south of the great wall, is believed to have abandoned any idea of offering organized resistance. His flight was hurried. He had proceeded to Loafa, along the Pekin-Tientsin railway, with a view to directing operations around the capital, when he learned of the defeat there and fled, leaving his disorganized troops to follow as best they could.

Army Roams Country.

Half of Chang's army is roaming the country toward Pekin and Tientsin, all trying to reach the latter place or a point northward on the Mukden railroad. A message received from Tientsin through official channels last night said thousands of soldiers were observed outside the city on their way east.

The military attaches here learn that Wu sent a force to attempt to capture and disarm the retreating army, but it is not believed capture of many of the widely scattered troops is possible.

The Pekin gendarmerie disarmed 11,000 of Chang's soldiers outside the city walls. Wu Pei-Fu is said to have paid each of the men $10 for the expenses of his trip home.

No Foreigners Hurt.

Pekin, after witnessing battles just outside its walls for the last five days, remains free of the presence of large bodies of troops from either side. No foreigner was hurt while inside the walls, and the property of foreigners was reported as respected.

An accurate estimate of the casualties cannot be obtained at this time, but 2,500 dead or wounded were counted near Changsintien.

Foreign doctors said there were similar casualties at Fungtai.

ENGINEERS OF U. S. WILL GATHER HERE FOR FIVE-DAY MEET

Leaders in Profession to Attend Spring Session of American Society of Mechanical Engineers.

SESSIONS TO BEGIN ON MONDAY MORNING

1,500 Expected to Be on Hand for Discussion of Social, Economic and Professional Problems.

Five hundred mechanical engineers, representing the leadership of their profession throughout the United States will arrive in Atlanta today and tomorrow for the annual spring convention of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers.

In this convention, though not the largest in numbers which Atlanta has entertained, will be represented by far the largest investment of capital represented by any meeting ever held here. A total attendance of 1,500 is expected.

Not millions but billions of dollars have been invested in this country on the advice and according to the plans and specifications of the men who will assemble here. A considerable proportion of these plants are now under the operating supervision of these engineers, ranging all the way from manufacturing establishments of all kinds to great hydro-electric power plants in all parts of the country.

Atlanta Section Host.

The Atlanta section of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers will be official host of the convention, assisted by the Atlanta sections of the other technical societies, such as the electrical engineers, civil engineers, architects, etc.

Plans have been made to give the distinguished visitors an entertainment thoroughly in keeping with Atlanta's reputation for hospitality and in keeping with their professional standing and distinction.

The convention will open Monday and run through Thursday, and the first delegation will arrive Sunday afternoon at Brookwood station, consisting of mechanical engineers of New York city and state, numbering fifty to sixty, who will stop at Chancellorsville on their way for a visit to the University of Virginia.

Committees Named.

Committees have been organized among the affiliated technical societies of Atlanta to attend to all details of entertainment, and in ad-

YOUTH OF 18 DIES IN AUTO ACCIDENT

Police Have Not Yet Been Able to Locate Driver of Car Which Hit Reynolds' Truck.

Willie H. Reynolds, 18-year-old clerk, who lives on South Boulevard, died at Grady hospital at 11 o'clock Saturday night as the result of injuries received early in the afternoon when the truck on which he was riding was struck by an automobile said to have been driven by a negro, at the corner of Lakewood and Stewart avenues. He was carried to the hospital where physicians stated at first that his injuries were only slight but a later examination disclosed internal injuries which resulted in his death eight hours after the accident.

The driver of the car which struck the truck has not been found and no case was made as the result of the accident. Further investigation by the police Sunday is expected to result in arrests, it was announced at headquarters late Saturday night.

The body was removed to the undertaking parlors of Harry G. Poole. He is survived by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Reynolds; a sister, Miss Esther Reynolds, and grand parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Reynolds.

Charlie Wilbur Kerr, 5-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Kerr, of 11 Earl street, sustained a fractured skull and internal injuries in front of 215 Luckie street early Saturday afternoon when he was struck by an automobile driven by Frank Mimms, who lives at the corner of Marietta and Luckie streets. His condition is considered serious though physicians have hope of his recovery. Mimms was held at police station without bond.

John Wright, who lives at the corner of Wesley avenue and Atlanta Heights, was painfully injured when the car he was driving collided with another car. J. A. Murray, 55 West Harris street, suffered slight injuries when the car he was driving ran into a motor truck on DeKalb avenue.

MORE MOTOR CARS THAN EVER BEFORE

Good Roads Association Man Denies Road Bond Opponent's Statement That Hard Times Reduced Cars.

At least 5,012 more automobiles are in use in Georgia today than there were at the same date in 1921, according to statistics procured from the secretary of state by T. J. Farmer, of the Georgia Good Roads association, in refutation of a statement by M. J. Yeomans, of Dawson, to the effect that there were 15,000 less automobiles in use. The number of cars licensed in 1921 was 111,450, and up to date in 1922 a total of 117,362 have been issued.

Mr. Farmer takes Mr. Yeomans to task for alleged errors in his card published last week in the press of the state attacking the proposal to issue $75,000,000 worth of good roads bonds. He denies that the association stated that the state highway department had spent $1,000,000 in maintaining 1,400 miles of roadway, or a cost of $7,000 per mile, but says that the association stated that the department maintained a total of 5,500 miles of roadway for the $1,000,000, which would make the cost about $181.82 per mile.

Mr. Farmer also takes Mr. Yeomans to task for an alleged discrepancy between his figure of $1,073,913.42 and the official figure of $1,703,913.42 for the total 1921 income from automobile license fees. Mr. Farmer states further that the total collected to May, 1921, was $1,505,512.85, while to May of 1922 the collections total $1,579,819.30, an increase of over $74,000. The income from automobile license tax, he says, should increase at least 10 per cent a year, as the road bonds advocates estimate it will, and cites the case of California, where income from the source trebled in seven years. Improved highways, Mr. Farmer says, will stimulate the use of motor vehicles.

Mr. Yeomans' assertion that the people will be burdened by heavy taxes in addition to the automobile taxes is unwarranted, Mr. Farmer says, because the proposed amendment to the constitution providing for the bond issue prohibits issuing more bonds from year to year than the current license tax income will cover.

Decatur Merchant Allowed to Use Name "The Globe"

Samuel Orenstein, a Decatur merchant, may continue to use the name, "The Globe," in his business, it was ruled Saturday by Judge Samuel H. Sibley, in dismissing a suit recently brought by the Surprise Store at 89 Whitehall street.

The Surprise Store company alleged that it had spent a considerable amount in advertising the name "The Globe" in connection with its store, and contended that it was unfair competition for the Decatur merchant to call his store "The Globe." Judge Sibley ruled that the use of the name by a merchant in an entirely different municipality was not unethical.

One of the main attractions will be the exhibition of Eli Whitney's original cotton gin.

ENGINEERS OF U. S. WILL GATHER HERE

dition thereto the various civic bodies have pledged co-operation and assistance in making this convention, from the standpoint of entertainment, the peer of any that has ever been held here.

Th various committees and their chairmen are as follows:

General committee—H. E. Bussey, chairman of the Atlanta section of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers.

Entertainment—N. C. Harrison.

Professional programs—E. A. Brooks.

Hotels—W. J. Neville.

Automobiles—W. H. Holby.

Hotel information booth—Professor R. S. King.

Hospitality—Adam W. Jones.

Piedmont hotel will be convention headquarters, with the main convention sessions in the hotel convention hall, and with sectional meetings in various other halls.

Elaborate Program.

An elaborate social program has been arranged, including a dinner at the Piedmont hotel Monday evening, an automobile tour Tuesday afternoon, a dinner dance on the Hotel Ansley roof garden Tuesday evening, a barbecue and golf match at East Lake club Wednesday afternoon, and a theater party at the Howard on Thursday afternoon.

Engineers specializing in mechanical practice will hold special sessions to discuss subjects of special interest. There will also be sessions for members at the faculty of engineering schools. The entire field of mechanical engineering will be covered by the program.

One of the pecial features of the convention, of absorbing interest to the public as well as to engineers, will be the original model of Eli Whitney's coton gin, loaned for the occasion.

Revolutionized Industry.

This invention completely revolutionized the cotton growing industry. It laid the foundation of the south's whole prosperity. Without the cotton gin, to separate the seed from the lint, cotton would never have become a staple fabric. The ginners consider it particularly appropriate and interesting to bring Eli Whitney's original model to Atlanta, the leading city of the entire cotton belt, where the Cotton States and International Exposition in 1895 attracted world-wide attention.

A tremendous impetus to industrial development in this part of the country is likely to be an outgrowth of the engineers convention in Atlanta. Many great industrial firms are now awaiting the reports of engineers concerning the feasibility of locating factories in this section, with its abundance of water power and proximity to raw materials produced in the southeast.

Parties of engineers will visit the leading hydro-electric developments in the Atlanta territory, such as Tallulah Falls, and also that great, though only partially completed development, Muscle Shoals.

It is understood that some of the leading cotton manufacturers of New England contemplate moving their entire establishments to the south if favorable reports are made by their consulting engineers.

Dean Dexter S. Kimball, of Cornell, will head the delegation to the local session. Dean Kimball is president of the society. Another nationally known engineer who will come to Atlanta for the meeting is John L. Harrington, of Kansas City, one of the vice presidents. Mr. Harrington's firm has just been selected as the consulting engineers for the Spring street viaduct, which will cost about $750,000

Mr. Harrington is a native of Lawrence, Kan., and is a graduate of both the University of Kansas and McGill university. His engineering experience has been obtained in a wide range of activity centering in Kansas City, Pittsburg, Chicago, New York, Milwaukee, Elmira, N. Y., and Johnston, Pa. The Cambria Steel company, the Carnegie Steel company, the American Locomotive company and the Baltimore and Ohio railroad are among the concerns with which he has been connected.

Since 1907, Mr. Harrington has been a consulting engineer in Kansas City, where he is now a member of the firm of Harrington, Howard & Ash. During his consulting work, which has largely been devoted to the design and supervision of construction of large bridges, he has developed the vertical-lift bridge and the movable deck.

Other Prominent Officials.

Wife's Accusation May Bring Solution Of Murder Mystery

Anderson, S. C., May 6.—Charges that A. J. Carroll killed Matthew Burnett, a local merchant, whose death December 14, 1920, baffled police for more than a year, will be placed before the Anderson county grand jury when it meets Monday, it was stated tonight by county officers. Burnett was beaten to death in his store.

The officers said that Mrs. Carroll who recently had her husband arrested in Greenville on a warrant charging nonsupport and desertion, had written them a letter saying Carroll had returned home here on the morning after Burnett was slain, burned blood-stained clothes on, and threatened to kill her and throw her body in an old well if she told.

Carroll is confined in the county jail and no one allowed to see him.

CHILDREN TO VISIT TECH HIGH SCHOOL

Next Wednesday the "Go-to-High School" campaign of the school department will be featured by visitors' day for pupils of the seventh grades of all the grammar schools at Tech High school.

At Tech High an elaborate exhibit of literary and shop work will be shown.

May 25 has been designated as the day for seventh grade graduates to name the high school they expect to enter in September.

H. R. Hunter, assistant superintendent of schools, is the author of the Go-to-High-School campaign idea.

JOEL HUNTER BUYS ROBERT COONEY HOME

The Dutch colonial residence at 1373 Peachtree street, directly opposite Washington seminary, has been purchased by Joel Hunter from Robert L. Cooney, it was learned Saturday. Several properties figured in the transaction, and the actual price was not given, but is understood to have a valuation of approximately $40,000.

The residence stands in one of the finest residential sections of the city. The lot has a frontage of about 90 feet and a depth of 400 feet. The grounds are very attractive. A rolling lawn extends upward some distance back from the street. In the rear of the house is one of the city's prettiest rose gardens, containing about 300 bushes.

The home was originally built for Willie Timmons, but he disposed of it some time ago. Mr. Cooney had occupied it for about a year.

discontinued business or consolidated with other concerns.

At the close of 1921 there was a total of 9,650.12 miles of steam railroad mileage in the state.

A "gratifying decrease" in the number of fatalities and accidents on steam railroads was noted in the report. For the year ending December 31, 1921, there was a total of 1,682 persons killed or injured in accidents, divided as follows: Passengers killed, 1; injured, 93; employees killed, 25; employees injured, 1,342; other persons killed, 76; injured, 145. A total of 2,777 injuries and deaths, due to accidents, was listed in the 1920 report.

Fewer Persons Killed.

A similar reduction in the number of persons killed or injured in street railroad accidents over 1920 is also enumerated. This report shows there were: Passengers killed, 1; injured, 1,120; employees, 0; employees injured, 205; other persons killed, 14; injured, 456.

In 1920 there were 2,119 persons injured and killed as compared with 1,797, the 1921 report showing a decrease of 322 in street railway accidents. The decrease in accidents on steam railroads was even greater, there being 1,095 less accidents than in 1920.

During 1921 the commission approved for the Georgia Railway and Power company the following bond issues: $176,000 on April 29; $308,500 or September 9; and $4,000,000 on November 21. Approval of bonds for the Georgia Railway and Electric company (which is leased by the Georgia Railway and Power company) was made as follows: $198,000 on April 29, and $235,000 on September 9.

Interstate Commission.

A bond issue of $42,000 was approved on December 15 for the Fairburn and Atlanta Railway and Electric company.

"In its 1920 report the commission gave a brief history of the railroad freight and passenger rates applicable then and now on intrastate traffic in Georgia," reads the report. "It was further stated in this report that the interpretation placed upon the federal transportation act of 1920 by the interstate commerce commission had been questioned by several state commissions, and that there was then pending in the supreme court of the United States an appeal brought by the state of Wisconsin, which would bring about a judicial interpretation of the act with particular reference to the powers claimed under it by the interstate commerce commission as to declaring invalid and setting aside state made rates on strictly intrastate traffic.

"This commission joined with other state commissions in filing briefs. This case has been decided, substantially sustaining the interpretation of the interstate commission as to its powers under the act. Bills are now pending in congress, proposing to so amend the act as to restrict the powers of the interstate commerce commission as to intrastate rates to substantially those exercised by it under the principles laid down years ago in the Shreveport cases. Practically all of the state commissions in the United States are giving their support to these measures. This commission is joining in this support. Without amendment of the act of congress, the powers of the states over intrastate railroad rates will remain, as for the past two years, materially restricted."

A revision of intrastate freight traffic rates has been in course of consideration for the last several months, in which efforts are being made to bring about more extensive co-operation in rate matters between the interstate commerce commission and the state commission, continues the report.

An order was issued by the commission December 5, 1921, cancelling the sleeping and chair car surcharge on intrastate traffic, which was in effect during federal operation of the railroads.

Report On State Road.

Under the caption of "The Western and Atlantic railroad" the report reads:

Under the 1913 lease act, the railroad commission is charged with supervision of the Western and Atlantic railroad and the state's Chattanooga properties, all under leases which began on December 27, 1919.

The lease contract for the railroad properties requires the lessee (N., C. & St. L. railroad) in addition to and exclusive of such expenditures as may be required for the proper repair and maintenance of the railroad and its properties, to spend on capital additions and betterments not less than an average of $60,000 per annum during the term of the lease, an aggregate of $3,000,000. It was made the duty of the commission to check these charges at the beginning of each year and approve or disapprove the same. During the two years of the lease expiring December 31, 1919, the lessee has expended in additions and betterments, under the above mentioned provision of the lease contract, a total of $253,041.

The commission has had its engineer inspect and check these improvements and the expenditures therefor, and has approved the same.

The principal items have been for increased weight in rails, improved track materials and telegraph and telephone lines on the north side of the track.

The commission has also made a careful inspection of the entire road, depots, etc., and is pleased to report the road in first-class condition.

In making its inspection the commission kept in mind a joint resolution of the general assembly at its last session requesting it to order the erection of new stations at Marietta, Cartersville, Calhoun and Dalton, and sheds at each point on the road. Up to this date the commission has not deemed conditions favorable for the carrying out of the suggestions of the general assembly and no final action has been taken thereon.

The two commercial buildings in Chattanooga leased to J. B. Pound have been extensively remodeled and improved and converted to hotel uses. They are in good condition and vastly improved over their condition when leased. We are satisfied that the lessee has spent on these buildings an amount in excess of contract requirements.

Tomorrow Evening, at 7 o'Clock Atlanta's First "Own Your Home" Exposition Opens at the Auditorium

This exposition is the result of the efforts of a group of public-spirited men who, sensing the need of thousands of Atlanta families for homes of their own, undertook to gather under one roof exhibits of everything that goes to make the home. Their idea was to show how easy and how desirable it is for the family of even most moderate circumstances to realize the independence of owning their OWN home. And how well these men have succeeded will be shown Monday night when the doors open on the exposition.

You Can Plan Your Complete Home From Among These Exhibits

The Exposition exhibits cover everything from the lot itself to the last detail of the furnishings—from methods to provide funds with which to build to the insurance on the completed home.

The information to be obtained here in one evening could only be assembled under other circumstances by the prospective home owner after days, maybe weeks, of hard work. Here the family can gather around the various exhibits and plan their new home with the assistance of highly trained experts—passing from exhibit to exhibit, planning the home down to the minutest details, not from catalogs but from the actual materials and with assistance of the best talent trained in using those materials.

Methods of financing that will surprise you, desirable building lots at astonishingly reasonable prices, building concerns that are eager to aid the new home builder, furnishings that can be obtained on extremely easy terms—all will be shown for the benefit of the prospective home builder.

You can attend the exposition and in ONE evening plan your home to the last detail, with accurate estimates of the cost.

Valuable Gifts to Visitors

Building materials, a house plan, and furnishings for a six-room brick bungalow, and several building lots in desirable new subdivisions will be presented to visitors to the exposition through the co-operation of a group of exhibitors. Every person who registers at each of the booths of those contributing to the plan will have an opportunity to obtain these gifts absolutely without the cost of a penny.

Photographs, plans and full details may be seen at the booths of the firms co-operating in the presentation.

RECALL OF REILY PRACTICALLY SURE

Porto Rico Governor to Lose Post Because of Native Opposition—Candidates Appear.

BY JAMES A. HOLLOMON,
Constitution Bureau,
Raleigh Hotel.

Washington, May 6.—(By Constitution Leased Wire.)—It is now practically assured that Governor E. Mont Reily, of Porto Rico, will be recalled, regardless of whether a resolution for investigation of his administration now before the house, is passed. Ever since Governor Reily's inauguration, ten months ago he has been in continual conflict with members of the unionist and majority party on the island, and the belief is expressed even by strong supporters of the administration, that conditions there will not subside until he leaves.

So strong are rumors that Governor Reily will be recalled that various candidates to succeed him have appeared. Some surprise was occasioned today by a report that George B. Christian, Jr., secretary to the president, was slated for Reily's place, and the most surprised individual was Mr. Christian, himself. It was intimated at the white house this morning that Mr. Christian is satisfied in Washington.

It is understood that President Harding has asked Representative Horace M. Towner, of Iowa, chairman of the house committee on insular affairs, whether he would be willing to succeed Governor Reily. Hamilton Fish, Jr., and members of the New York delegation in congress are behind the candidacy of Rhinelander Waldo for the post, urging his knowledge of Spanish and his service as an army officer in the Philippines as qualifications for the post. The former New York police commissioner has made several visits to Washington, it is learned, to discuss the matter with New York members of congress.

Two army officers, both acquainted with insular affairs, have been mentioned in connection with the Porto Rico governorship. They are Major General Frank McIntyre, chief of the war department bureau on insular affairs, and Major General Clarence Edwards, formerly head of this bureau, who was backed last year for appointment as governor of Porto Rico by Secretary Weeks.

Value of Young Men to Country Shown by Banker

A feature of the May issue of The City Builder, the official publication of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce, is the contribution of H. Warner Martin, head of the Lowry National bank, on "Opportunities in Business for Young Men." Drawn from the experiences and observations of Mr. Martin, who, himself, rose from the position of bank clerk to president within ten years, the article contains suggestions and advice that will be valuable to the young man at the beginning of his business career.

"The country needs the young man today more than ever before, for efficient service, and the public is entitled to the very best service he can render," the article declares. "It is gratifying to state that in this section of the country we are developing through specialized education a citizenry that is rapidly establishing the south's commercial independence.

"In the rapidly moving and progressive business world of today there are doubtless golden opportunities for the young man who has the capacity, the qualifications and the determination to succeed. Indeed, the opportunities are much more numerous for his advancement than they were even two or three short decades ago."

The City Builder contains an editorial by Asa G. Candler on "Why I Invest in Atlanta Real Estate." A digest of the three proposed city charters is also contained in this month's issue.

An editorial calls attention to the fact that men are given a highly specialized technical training at Georgia Tech each year and graduated, only to be called to other parts of the country for service. It is urged that every means be used to induce these men to accept positions in the state, so that this locality may profit by their training.

FEDERATED HI CLUBS NAME NEW OFFICERS

The final meeting of the federated Hi Y clubs of the city was held in the dining room of the Central Y. M. C. A. Thursday evening with Robert Bond, president of the Atlanta Federated Hi Y clubs, officiating. The meeting was opened by prayer of Prof. J. E. White, of Fulton High school. The evening's program was under the direction of K. C. Stoll, boys' work secretary of the Central Y. M. C. A.

The retiring presidents are Wm. Gayles, of Boys' Hi Y; Andrew Tucker, of Commercial; Ralph Moody, of the Fulton, and Hayden Hollingsworth, of Tech. Speeches by newly elected presidents and other officers were made by the following:

Fulton: Cecil Mason, president; George Bray, vice president; Amos Alsobrook, secreary; J. D. Yeager, treasurer.

Boys' Hi Y: Harry McCash, president; Cecil Jones, vice president; Gordon Keith, secretary; Gilbert Boggs, treasurer.

The refreshments and dinner were served by Miss Mildred Kibler, Mrs. F. E. Kibler, Miss Mary Simms, Miss Elizabeth Martin, Miss Edith Pierce, Mrs. N. E. Martin and Miss Sallie Shannon.

Increase in Water Rate of Decatur Is Suggested

Decatur, Ga., May 6.—(Special.)—Probability of a flat increase in the Decatur city water rates looms as a result of tentative action taken by the board of commissioners at its meeting Friday night.

The suggestion was made by Mayor Scott Candler, who pointed out the absolute necessity of devising a plan whereby the city's operating revenue may be increased, and it met with no serious opposition on the part of the other members of the board. Final decision was deferred, however, to the next meeting of the board, though it may be included in the call for a meeting to be held next Monday night.

Decatur consumers are now paying a minimum rate of $1 per 3,000 gallons for the water they buy from the city, receiving 20 per cent discount if they pay their water bills before the 10th of the month. The proposal made by Mayor Candler is that the discount privilege be withdrawn, which would make $1 per month the lowest possible rate the consumer would be allowed to pay. This would add approximately $400 per month to the gross operating revenue income of the city's water department.

J. O. U. A. M. TO HOLD MEMORIAL EXERCISES

Appropriate memorial exercises will be held by the Juniors and Daughters of the Junior Order of American Mechanics at the Baptist tabernacle at 3 o'clock in the afternoon of May 14. The exercises will be open to the public.

FOOD DISTRIBUTION IN FLOOD AREA BEGINS

Natchez, Miss., May 5.—(By the Associated Press.)—Under the direction of Adjutant General G. L. Toomb, who was sent to the inundated areas adjacent to the Weecama crevasse above Ferriday by Governor John M. Parker, of Louisiana, measures were begun today for the relief of flood sufferers in Concordia parish.

Following a survey of the parish and a conference with parish officials it was announced by General Toombs that three food zones would be immediately established in Concordia parish under the direction of officers of the Louisiana national guard. The distribution of food is expected to begin tomorrow.

It was stated that the food zones would be established at Ferriday, where a barge of supplies will be stationed; at Vidalia and at Forrest. In addition to this a zone with Sicily Island as a base will be provided for flood sufferers of the northern parts of Catahoula and Concordia parishes. There is still railroad communication between Sicily Island and Monroe and supplies for this zone can be routed by rail. Food stocks for the Vidalia, Ferriday and Forrest zones will be secured in Natchez and loaded on barges, which will be provided by the government fleet here.

It is estimated that seevn thousand people in the three areas must be provided for.

Notification is being given the planters of Concordia to arrange for the registration of their tenants in order that the distribution of food may be started with the least possible delay.

Congressman Raps Government Stand In Strike of Miners

Washington, May 5.—Discussing the coal strike, Representative Huddleston, democrat, Alabama, declared in the house today that he wished "some ne could say something that would get under the skin of the administration in the interest of humanity."

"We have heard it said from the white house that the administration has some idea on the strike," said Mr. Huddleston, "but nothing has been done. Nothing will be done unless the administration sees danger of losing its wager that the operators will win. If it loses its bet, or if it appears that the miners will win their fight wit. the operators, and is on the point of making a fair contract, then we will see the administration acting. But so long as the man the administration wants to win is on top, nothing will be said."

Mr. Huddleston declared that "the complacency of Secretary Hoover and his willingness to let the fight go on to a finish is unparalleled in American history."

Dr. P. A. Tatum, of Columbus, was elected vice president, and Dr. A. R. Rozar, of Macon, second vice president.

Split in Railway Shop Workers To Be Discussed

Macon, Ga., May 5.—(Special.)—For the purpose of discussing the split that has occurred in the ranks of the United Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way employees and railway shop workers, caused by the withdrawal of the skilled men in that branch of the service in the southeast, as announced some time ago, E. F. Grable, of Detroit, president of the organization, has called a meeting of all general chairmen and vice presidents of the different railroad organizations to be held in Atlanta on Tuesday, May 16.

The call goes to all chairmen and vice presidents in the southeastern and Pocahontas districts. Grable, it is understood, is trying to prevent further withdrawals from the organization.

J. O. Raley, formerly an international vice president of the Grable organization and a resident of Macon, who was chosen president of the order of skilled railway maintenance of way employees at a meeting for the southeast held here a few weeks ago, is looked upon as an outlaw leader by Grable in correspondence being freely circulated among railroad employees of the southeast.

His resignation from the Grable organization has been accepted and following its acceptance it is said that Grable has preferred charges aginst Raley.

"That's the funniest thing I ever heard of,' said Raley today when asked about the report. "I am no longer attached to the United Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way employees and railroad shop laborers. I have opened offices in this city for the new organization, of which I am president."

The split in the organization is said by men in a position to know to be an attempt to separate the skilled from the unskilled labor in the maintenance of way departments.

MARY PICKFORD HEADS PICTURE ACTRESSES' CLUB

Los Angeles, Cal., May 5.—Mary Pickford has been chosen president of a club of motion picture actresses, the primary purpose of which is to protect the good names of its members, it was announced here today.

Miss Helen Ferguson, organizer, stated admission would be by investigation only, and none would be admitted who were not "credits to the industry." Other officers will be elected Monday when a name for the club will be chosen.

The Reign of Terror.

(From the New York Sun.)

Speaking of the crime wave, it is recalled that London in the winter of 1860-61 had an epidemic of crime and lawlessness characterized by extremes of brutality and wanton viciousness.

Garroting was their favorite pastime. A piece of piano wire or waxed cord fashioned with a running slip knot made a simple and effective instrument. While one man waylaid a well-dressed pedestrian from the front the accomplice stole up in the rear and deftly dropped the noose over the unsuspecting victim's head and lassoed him about the neck. Partial or complete strangulation followed, depending entirely upon the whim of the garroter.

The garroters act was passed, which, in addition to the usual sentence of penal servitude, authorized the flogging of male offenders over 16 years of age. The judges maintain throughout subsequent controversies that the rigorous enforcement of that act entirely stopped garroting.

But during the worst of this reign of terror many shop windows featured anti-garroting collars, which consisted of broad bands of stiff leather, reinforced in some cases with metal and ornaments with spikes, after the manner of bulldog collars.

Something in a Name.

(From the Birmingham Age-Herald.)

"Now, here's a neat bungalow," said the real estate agent. "Just the thing for you, and only $5,000."

"Let's enter into an amiable conspiracy," said the prospective customer.

"Eh?"

"Call it a cottage and cut the price."

FRANCE WILL AWAIT BELGIAN APPROVAL

minister admitted, was a serious question that he had failed up to the present to work out.

French Public Opinion.

M. Barthou then saw Premier Lloyd George and gave him a detailed account of the circumstances which forced France to adopt her present position side by side with Belgium.

"Public opinion in France," said M. Barthou, "was deeply moved by the announcement of a separate Russo-German treaty, and had even gone so far as to consider it a new war with Germany, and it might be also, with Russia, was imminent. This excitement was calmed down, but the incident made Frenchmen remember with all the more gratitude the help extended to France by Belgium during the war. It made France, Mr. Premier, less willing than ever to part company with Belgium.

"The amended property article has been examined by the cabinet in Paris, which found it insufficient. Although the committees on foreign affairs in both chamber and senate took no official action, because they did not wish to interfere with negotiations being conducted by the government, they have expressed their entire agreement with the course we have taken.

Question of Principle.

"The question involved is one of principle, and there is no reason why the relations between the allies should be affected. There should be no question of choosing between them."

The French narrative, which lays emphasis on the friendly tone adopted by both Lloyd George and Barthou throughout the talk, continues by saying that M. Barthou then suggested that the way out of the difficulty was to devise some means of bringing Belgium into line with the other powers. He asked Mr. Lloyd George to see what could be done about reaching a compromise as suggested earlier in the day by Signor Schanzer.

Mr. Lloyd George answered: "A new formula is out of the question. Now that the document has been handed to the Russians, it is impossible for us to modify it. We must await the Russian answer."

In reply to a question tonight the French leaders admitted that the developments of the day not only cut Belgium and France out of the memorandum submitted to Russia, but meant a cleavage between Great Britain and France regarding the property clause. The only hope that they saw of getting back into the Russian negotiations was if the Russians' "reply were such as to permit Belgium and France to suggest modifications in the treatment of property of foreigners during later negotiations with the soviet delegates.

TO REVIVE PATENT PACT WITH GERMANS

Washington, May 5.—Administration leaders said today that a patent protective treaty with Germany would be revived before May 11, the time limit under the peace treaty. The senate foreign relations committee today, after hearing Secretary Hughes in favor of reviving the treaty and war department patent experts in opposition decided not to interfere with plans of the executive branch of the government to restore the convention.

Secretary Hughes, it was said, told the foreign relations committee in executive session that action on the treaty should not be delayed because it was necessary to revive the treaty by May 11 and that pending legislation to restrict German patents could not be disposed of within the limited time. Chairman Johnson and members of the senate patents committee said the patent bill would be pressed with all possible speed and be designed to meet the situation caused by revival of the old treaty.

TOLL OF DEATH IN GUN BATTLE IS NOW THREE

Caton, Ohio, May 5.—Three men were dead and two bandits dying early today, the result of a gun battle in woods five miles north of here late yesterday between an armed posse and four gunmen, following the kidnapping of a motorcycle policeman who had arrested the men for speeding.

The gunman, the police say, had come here in a stolen automobile to assist in the release of "Oklahoma Slim" John Stevens, a member of their gang, who is in the local workhouse and who is said to be wanted in numerous middle western cities on charges of bank robbery.

The dead: Ralph W. Hoffee, Canton contractor, member of the posse.

Eddie Stevenson, Cleveland gunman.

Unidentified gunman.

Harry Harper and George Brainer, the other gunmen, were shot through the dead. Physicians said they could not survive the day.

Two others of the posse also were shot.

When the gunmen were arrested by Motorcycle Policeman John Wise they forced him to enter their automobile and drove to the woods, where they bound, gagged and tied the officer to a tree.

J. C. Campbell, a telephone lineman, who witnessed the kidnapping, notified the police, then jumped into his automobile and followed the gunmen. Several times he stopped, climbed a pole, cut in on a wire with his testing apparatus and notified the officers of the course of the fugitives.

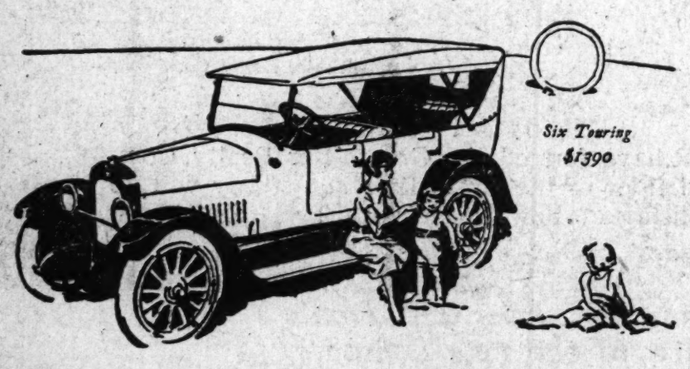

As the officers neared the bandits the latter opened fire and fled into the woods, where they were surrounded by the police and scores of citizens.

The battle ensued.

When the fire from the gangsters stopped the posse found all four sprawled on the ground, the unidentified man dead.

Stevenson died later from his wounds.

HARRIS COMMENTS ON DEFEAT OF NEW

BY JAMES A. HOLLOMON.
Constitution Bureau,
Raleigh Hotel.

Washington, May 6.—(By Constitution Leased Wire.)—In discussing the republican primary result in Indiana this week, Senator Harris, of Georgia, said today the defeat of Senator New by his own party was the severest set-back received by the Harding administration since they came into power. Senator New was praised in his campaign as being close to President Harding.

The Newberry case was a factor in the result, according to Senator Harris, as the winner, ex-Senator Beveridge, said he was opposed to seating Newberry. Senator New voted for Newberry in the senate and is the first senator to face the people since Newberry was seated.

Senator Harris said the results in every election and primary now showed the weakness of the Harding administration and plainly indicated that the republicans are terrified because of their lack of accomplishments since March 4, 1921, when they came into power.

ThreeNegroesDie OnLynchers'Pyre In Heart of Town

Kirvin, Texas, May 6.—By the Associated Press.)—Three negroes were burned to death at the same stake here at 5 o'clock this morning by a mob of 500 men following their alleged implication in the criminal assault and murder of a 17-year-old white girl whose mutilated body was found near here Thursday night.

"Snap" Curry, the first negro burned, was taken from the custody of Freestone county officers early last night as he was benig conveyed from Wortham to some point west. It is alleged that he confessed to the mob that he had assaulted and murdered the girl and that in his confession he implicated the two other negroes, J. H. Varney and Mose Jones.

The mob divested the sheriff of his keys to the Freestone county jail where Jones and Varney were being held as suspects. Hurrying to the jail, the mob unlocked the doors and took the two negroes in charge. All three negroes were then rushed to Kirvin, the home of the dead girl, and an iron stake driven into the ground on a small square in the heart of the town. Wood was accumulated and saturated with oil.

Protest Innocence.

Curry was burned first. Then Varney and Jones. There was some delay in burning the last two inasmuch as they steadfastly protested their innocence. Third degree methods failed to bring a confession from them and they were finally cremated on the strength of Curry's testimony. After the third negro had been burned to a crisp all three bodies were piled together and a mass of fuel and oil flung over them. This was ignited, the flames soaring 25 or 30 feet in the air. Early today the flames were still burning fiercely.

The mob rapidly dispersed, and as day dawned there was only a few persons remaining to witness the aftermath of the triple cremation.

In Front of Churches.

All three negroes were employed on the farm of J. T. King, prominent farmer of the community.

Mr. King was present at the cremation, and the mob leaders are said to have obtained his approval before lighting the torches.

The lynchings were carried out deliberately. With the exception of the screams of the condemned men there was little to disturb the early morning quiet of the backwoods community. The plot where the burning took place is in front of two churches. One of the negroes is said to have died singing a church anthem.

The girl was riding her horse home from school, several miles from Kirvin, late Thursday when she was attacked. Her body later was found near the road with twenty-three knife wounds in the head, neck and chest.

Two White Men Held in Case.

Teague, Texas, May 6.—Two white men were detained today for further investigation of their actions preceding the attack on and murder of the 17-year-old girl for which three negroes were burned at Kirvin this morning. No charges were filed against them, according to reports here.

That's Easy.

Percy (innocently)—I dunno.

Teacher—You ought to. Who is it, when everybody else is industriously studying, sits and watches the rest or looks out of the window?

Percy (brightening)—Why, you, Miss Jones.

Professor Killed At S. C. School; Slayer Suicides

Columbia, S. C., May 6.—Professor M. Goode Homes, head of the department of engineering of the University of South Carolina, was shot and killed in the treasurer's office of the administration building today by Benjamin Haile, superintendent of grounds of the university, who then killed himself.

Before turning the revolver upon himself, Haile sent a shot over the head of Dean Leonard T. Baker and pointed the weapon at Dr. William S. Currell, president of the university, who were in an adjoining office, and, hearing the first shots, started to investigate.

The double tragedy, according to a statement issued by Dr. Currell, was believed to be the result of "bitter feeling between the two men growing out of their conflicting duties at the university."

When Haile entered the treasurer's office, he sent a woman bookkeeper out on an errand, and there, consequently, were no eye-witnesses to the shooting. As Dr. Currell started to enter the room after the first shots had been fired, Haile, in warning him out, shouted: "You are responsible for this." The president left the room.

Police were summoned, and investigation revealed the body of Homes in one room and that of Haile in another.

Homes was shot five times, one bullet penetrating the heart. Haile used only one bullet in taking his own life.

Professor Homes was born in Boydton, Va., in 1883, and was educated at the University of Virginia and the United States Military academy. He had held many important engineering assignments and stood high in his profession. He is survived by a wife and four small children. Professor Homes has been a member of the University of South Carolina faculty since 1909.

Superintendent Haile came to the university in 1912 from Camden, where he was chief of police. He was first marshal and then superintendent of grounds. He was about 44 years of age, and is survived by his wife, a son a and daughter.

BATTLE MONUMENTS.

Instead of the traditional shafts of granite and marble such as mark many battlefields of the revolution and the civil war, it has been suggested that relief maps in bronze be placed on the sites of the principal engagements of the A. E. F. in France. The maps are to be mounted on monuments on prominent spots of the terrain, so that visitors may refer from the maps to the surrounding country and get a clear conception of the engagement that took place there. Besides these relief maps, to be cast in bronze and enameled in color so as to show more clearly the hills and woods and streams, there are to be sketch maps showing in outline the positions held by the troops. Where necessary bronze tablets to commemorate certain spots of particular significance in the A. E. F. operations will also be put up.—New York Tribune.

The seven liberal arts are grammar, dialectics, rheoric, music, arithmetic, geometry and astronomy.

LAFAYETTE FARMER IS SHOT TO DEATH

LaFayette, Ga., May 6.—(Special.) R. B. Camp, a prominent planter of this county, was shot and killed by unknown parties some time Friday. Mr. Camp had gone fishing yesterday morning, and when he did not return late in the afternoon a search was made and last night his body was found in a nearby creek.

A load of buckshot had been fired into the back of his head, and death was instantaneous, it is thought.

No arrest has been made.

The largest cable in the world, carrying 408 pairs of wires, making it possible to conduct 600 conversations simultaneously, has been laid on the bed of the Detroit river, between Detroit and Windsor. The cable weighs 50,870 pounds, is 3,000 feet in length and 10 1-2 inches thick.

"Biggest watch in the world" is the claim made for one now on exhibition in Lincoln, England, according to the London correspondent of the Jewelers' Circular. In circumference it measured 53 inches and it cost 10,000 pounds to make it. It is an exact copy of an ordinary watch, but it weighs 100 pounds.

Carey ASFALTSLATE SHINGLES

"THE SHINGLES THAT NEVER CURL"

Undoubtedly, you have many times been attracted by the charming color of some Red, Green, or Blue-Black slate-surfaced "Carey"-Shingle Roof. Very probably you've wanted for your home, when you bought or built, just that kind of roof.

Its pleasing contrast with brick, stucco, or painted walls, backed up by green trees and blue sky, puts life and effectiveness into the setting of even the most modest home.

Underneath this most beautiful, fadeless slate surface there's an extra-heavy felt base which is saturated with the most wonderful and enduring water-proofing mineral that has ever been discovered.

Carey Shingles won't crack, split, nor rot. They're spark-proof, inexpensive and will never curl. Besides, they meet the requirements of all City Building Laws, as well as of the Fire Underwriters. Hence, they entitle the property they cover to the lowest rates of fire insurance.

Don't pay unnecessary premiums, and risk the safety of your property—as well as your peace of mind, by permitting your home to be roofed with any hazardous product. Insist upon having "Carey" Shingles applied, it will be most economical to you in the long run, aside from the many other desirable advantages. We'll be glad of an opportunity to supply you with full-sized samples, and name you our extremely low price.

Three Lots Free With Materials To Build Home

Every visitor at the "Own Your Home" Exposition to be held all this week at the Auditorium will be given a chance to secure three building lots absolutely free of all cost, and in connection with one of the two lots offered practically all of the material necessary for the building of a home will also be given free. And it does not cost a cent to get into the exposition—everything is free.

The Adair Realty and Trust company has offered a beautiful lot in its Stewart avenue development, lying on Lexington avenue. This is a highly desirable location in one of the fastest growing suburban subdivisions in the city.

J. R. Smith and M. S. Rankin are also offering a lot in Sylvan Hills, the recent development of this company which lies in a most attractive wooded section in West End.

S. B. Turman & Co. will give a finely located lot in their new Kirkwood development.

The only conditions attached to both offers is that the person who desires to enter the contest shall register at the booth of the company making the offer. Duplicate tickets will then be given to the contestant, and at the close of the show on Saturday night, a prominent citizens of Atlanta will draw the lucky numbers.

Building Material Offered.

To those who register for the Adair lot, a number of other gifts will be made, providing the entrant shall register at each of the booths making the supplementary offer. These gifts will go a long way towards giving the winner a finished home. They are as follows:

Leila Ross Wilburn will give a complete set of architect's drawings, containing working drawings and elevations, all ready to put into the hands of the builder.

B. Mifflin Hood Brick company will contribute all the face brick necessary for the building of the house, also tile for mantel work and rubble-random tile for terrace work. This company also agrees to furnish the necessary lime, cement and paster needed at actual cost.

W. B. Disbro Lumber company will furnish all the doors needed in the new home. These doors will be on exhibition at the booth of the company in the auditorium.

The Murphy Door Bed company will install in one room one of their convenient "In-a-Door" beds, and will also provide one of their folding ironing boards in another.

Mrs. William Lycett, Inc., will give a complete set of their famous gold monogram decorated china, the kind that is the pride of hundreds of the finest homes in Atlanta, to the winner.

And finally, when the new house is completed, the Edgar Dunlap Insurance Agency will cover it with fire insurance for a period of two years.

Those who desire to enter the contest should take especial care to register at each booth listed above in order to secure the gifts.

Children to Get Playhouse And Cash Prizes Free

Offerings at "Home" Show to Be Attractive to the Children.

The children are not to be forgotten in connection with the "Own Your Home" week. Those who are in charge of the exposition at the Auditorium realize that one of the most important features of the educational campaign which is being staged is to interest the children and make them see the value of home owning. As future citizens who should begin as early as possible to make investments in their homes which are to be, they are particularly desired to visit the show and see the many displays.

Perhaps the most attractive feature of the show to them will be a beautiful, life sized playhouse, built exactly like a large dwelling, having two nice rooms where the youngsters can play at keeping house. This playhouse has been constructed by the Pattillo Lumber company and will be on display at their booth.

When the show ends, the playhouse will be given free to some fortunate child. The children themselves cannot register for a chance to secure it, but all parents of children who visit the show can register for their children. The award will be made on Saturday night.

Essay Prize Fifty Dollars.

The second big feature for the children will be the prize essay competition which is open to all the school children of the city, whether attending public or private schools. Fifty dollars in prizes will be given to those children who can tell, in a short essay, the ten best reasons why a person should own his own home, the money being divided into fifteen prizes ranging from fifteen dollars down to one dollar.

The contest has been offered by the Steel Realty Development corporation, and blanks on which the essays must be written can be secured at the booth of this company. The children will then have all week to write their essays, turning them in at the end of the week to the Steel Realty booth.

The judges of the contest will be W. A. Sutton, J. W. Smith, Waverly Fairman, Mrs. Samuel Lumpkin and Miss Bessie Kempon.

Home Building Is Increasing

Number of building permits, January 1 to May 6, 1921, 1,150.
Amount of building permits, $3,481,199.
Number of new homes, 531.
Number of building permits, January 1 to May 6, 1922, 1,733.
Amount of building permits, $5,875,387.
Number of new homes, 1,214.

It is entirely fitting that the last week before the big Own Your Home exposition is to be held at the Atlanta auditorium the Public should give evidence of its home building enthusiasm by taking out permits for more homes. That is what the past week has developed.

The above figures tell a story that every citizens should be familiar with. Over 50 per cent increase in the number of building permits thus far this year over the same date last year is good reading in itself, but the amounts involved emphasize this increase even more tellingly. The amount is almost double. And the number of homes started and finished this year is two and one-half times as great as for the same period in 1921.

In figuring the number of homes each apartment is counted separately, each double house is counted as two. The difference in the way of putting this figure down is considerable when compared to the mere matter of permits. Last year there were 1,263 permits issued for residences, but the number of homes included in these permits ran over sixteen hundred. Already this year there are 1,214 homes as compared with a little in excess of 1,600 for the whole of last year.

If home building keeps up at this rate there will be more than three thousand new homes constructed in Atlanta in 1922. Atlanta can be proud of that.

BLUE SKY LAW BILL PASSED BY THE HOUSE

Chief Examiner T. B. Conner was in receipt Saturday of a telegram from Congressman E. E. Denison, of Illinois, notifying the Georgia securities commission of the passage by the house of the Denison bill.

The purpose of this measure is to uphold the blue sky legislation of the various states by prohibiting the use of the United States mails and other instrumentalities of interstate commerce to promoters who would offer securities in violation of the laws of the states. This legislation has been urged by the national association of securities commissioners for several years. As originally drawn, the bill was objected to by the Investment Bankers of America. As a result of a conference in Chicago last January, however, the state officials and the investment bankers agreed on a compromise bill. This measure was supported in the committee hearing by representatives of the states, the Investment Bankers and the American Bankers. Commenting on the passage of the bill by the house, Mr. Conner said:

"The enactment of the Denison bill by the house with practically no opposition seems to assure its passage in the senate and its becoming a law before the end of the current session. President Harding expressed himself to representatives of our association when we met in Washington last summer as being in favor of the measure.

"We regard this as one of the most important legislative achievements of this congress. It was in no sense a partisan measure. The Georgia delegation assured me in Washington about a month ago that they would give it their united support. Both of the Georgia senators have written us that they will vote for it.

"Most of the frauds that are now being committed in the sale of bogus securities are perpetrated by promoters sending seductive circulars through the mail in violation of the state laws. The house committee reported that hundreds of millions of dollars were being stolen from the American people annually in this way. This money came from those who could least afford to lose it. They were too clever to be caught by the existing statutes authorizing the denial of postal facilities on proof of fraud. They will not be able to escape under the Denison act, however, as the burden will be upon them to show that they had licenses to offer the securities."

PATROLMAN WOOLEY PAINFULLY INJURED

Patrolman J. W. Wooley was painfully injured Saturday night when he was struck over the head with a candy bucket at the corner of Gordon and Alabama streets by an unidentified white man. The officer was taking two men to the call box when a man struck him over the head. Patrolman Wooley held on to the two prisoners, but the man who struck him made his escape. It was necessary to take several stitches in the officer's head, but he was able to continue on duty.

Morgan, of Atlanta, Ga., are being held in custody here by government officials on a charge of white slavery, after being arrested at a local hotel with Mattie Lou Smith, 18, of Atlanta, and Mary White, 20, of Columbia, S. C.

Blaine Danley, special agent for the bureau of investigation, took up the case for the department of justice.

percentage of the pastors' salaries, was marked "non-concurrence" by the committee, and was so adopted by the body, and a like fate awaited another memorial seeking retrogression on the question of the use of tobacco on the part of young ministers who enter the itinerant ministry.

The question of unordained ministers, who are serving pastorates, having the right to administer the sacrament of the Lord's supper, as they do, to marry persons, and to baptize and receive candidates into the church, was reported adversely by the committee. After telling speeches by Rev. W. P. King, editor of The Wesleyan Advocate, Atlanta, and Dr. J. A. Burrows, of Chattanooga, and others, Dr. J. H. Eakes moved that the memorial be amended by changing the word "non concurrence" to "concurrence," the measure was recommitted for further action. It is now believed that the committee will recommend favorably, and it will be enacted into law.

Women Gain Point.

Dr. Bascom Anthony led the advocacy of granting membership to the president of the Woman's Missionary society in the quarterly conferences. The memorial adopted was prepared by the Woman's Missionary council. It would seem that it is clearly the policy of the general conference to grant all the privileges and prerogatives of laity rights to women.

Memorials and petitions seeking desired legislation continue to be submitted. A memorial to amend the order of the quarterly conference was sent to the committee today from the the North Georgia Conference.

The conference adjourned at 11:45 a. m. instead of at the usual hour of 12:30 p. m., this being due to the fact that disposition had been made of all available matters to that hour.

Georgia Preachers.

The two Georgia delegations are thoroughly alert and their council is recognized both in the committee rooms and on the floor of the body.

This evening was held the quadrennial anniversary of the board of education at which Bishop James Cannon, of Birmingham, and Bishop Edwin DuBose Mouzon, of Tulsa, Okla., made eloquent and inspiring addresses.

The local committee on public worship announced the following Georgians for pulpit ministrations for Sunday: Bishop Warren A. Candler and Dr. Franklin N. Parker, of Atlanta; Bishop William N. Ainsworth, of Macon, and Rev. John F. Yarbrough, of Dalton.

SATISFIED CHRISTIANS ARE SCORED BY PASTOR

During his sermon on "Behold, the Bridgebroom Cometh," Rev. E. G. Thomason, pastor Martha Brown Memorial Methodist church, deplored the fact that many so-called Christians rested serenely with knowledge that the ywere on a higher plane than some poor down-and-out person. "The good is the worst enemy of the best, for some of them attempt to serve more than one master, and that can not be successfully done," he declared.

Children of the primary and secondary classes will give a novel children's day program, under the direction of Mrs. M. E. Tilly and Mrs. Paul West At 11 o'clock Rev. Mr. Thomason will deliver a sermon on "Salvation for the Whole Family." Sunday evening will be the last time the Mackey sisters will sing as they leave the city early Monday morning.

YOU CAN WIN $1000.00

THE MONEY IS ALREADY ON DEPOSIT, WAITING FOR THE FORTUNATE WINNER. WHY SHOULDN'T YOU BE THAT WINNER?

FOURTH NATIONAL BANK, ATLANTA, GEORGIA.

American Cities Book Company, 1010 Flatiron Bldg., City.

Gentlemen: This will acknowledge your deposit of $1,500 with this bank, which we will hold as your guarantee that all prizes awarded by the judges to the winners of your Puzzle Contest will be paid; prizes totaling $1,500. These prizes to be distributed according to instructions received from the judges.

Very truly yours,
CHAS. I. RYAN.

Could You Use These Ten Crinkly $100 Bills?

Observe These Rules

1. This contest is open to all men, women, boys and girls everywhere, except employees of the American Cities Book Co. and their relatives. There is no entrance fee of any kind.

2. Use only one side of paper. Arrange your list alphabetically and number your list of objects in regular order—1, 2, 3, etc. Write name and address on each page in the upper right-hand corner. Use a separate sheet for anything else you may wish to write or ask about.

3. English words only will be accepted as they appear in the English Dictionary. Obsolete, hyphenated or compound words will not be counted. Both the singular and plural of a word will not count; either one of them may be used. The same spelling of a word will be counted only once. Each object or article, or parts thereof, can be listed only under one name.

4. Two or more people may co-operate in answering the puzzle. However, only one prize will be given to any one household. No prize will be awarded to more than one of any combination outside of the family, where a number—two or more—have worked together.

5. If a contestant sends more than one list under the same name, an assumed name, or a premarried name, then all lists of such contestant will be disqualified. If more than one list is sent by any group or by any members of the same group who have co-operated in the preparation of such lists, then all lists of such contestants will be disqualified.

6. All answers must be received through the mail or handed in through our office, 1010 Flatiron Building. Letters postmarked after mid night June 3d, 1922, will not be considered.

7. The first prize will be awarded for the answer containing the largest and most nearly correct list of the names of visible objects and articles beginning with the letter "T" shown in the picture herewith. No other consideration, such as neatness, style or handwriting will have any bearing on the decision. The full amount of any prize tied for will be paid to each tied participant.

8. The decision will be made by three judges entirely independent and having no connection with the American Cities Book Co. They will judge the answers submitted and award the prizes just as early after the contest closes as possible. The judges will have no previous knowledge of whether a contestant has qualified for a larger prize or not. Participation in the contest carries with it the acceptance of the decesion of the judges as final and conclusive.

9. All answers will have full consideration whether contestant has purchased a book or not.

10. At the close of the contest, when all lists have been graded, the names of the prize winners and the list of winning words will be printed in the daily newspapers of Atlanta. Write or call for large clear picture. Send self-addressed, stamped enveloped.

COSTS NOTHING TO TRY

Look at this picture. How many objects and articles can you find beginning with the letter "T"? For instance, there is "turkey, trombone, telescope," etc. How many more can you find? If the judges decide you have the largest and most nearly correct list of words you will win $25, even though you have not ordered the Book on Atlanta. However, with this same list, if you have placed an order for one Standard Edition of the Book on Atlanta, accompanied by $2.50, you would win $500; and if your order was for a De Luxe Edition, accompanied by $3.50, you would win $1,000. Isn't that easy?

"Short and Simple" was the motto in preparing this "T"-Word game, and one doesn't have to get all the words in the dictionary to win.

A Truly Wonderful Book

The purpose of this contest is to secure advance subscriptions to the book, "Atlanta—Yesterday, Today and Tomorrow."

This book, "Atlanta, Yesterday, Today and Tomorrow," is being written by John R. Hornaday, for the American Cities Book Co., and is one of a series upon outstanding American cities which he is now producing. It will contain information that every citizen of the community should have, and will stimulate the pride, the faith and the ambition of every reader.

Fathers and mothers should have this book in the home for the information and entertainment that it will contain, and for the benefit of the children that are growing up about them. An intimate knowledge of one's home community is a most valuable asset.

This exceptionally valuable book will appear in two forms; a De Luxe Edition, retailing for $3.50, and a Standard Edition, retailing for $2.50; the text and illustration to be the same in both editions, but the De Luxe Edition to come in an exceptionally attractive binding.

A beautifully illustrated work of high literary merit in which will be told the wonderful story of the growth and development of Atlanta—a virile, entertaining and informing work, illumined by many incidents of a romantic and humorous character.

Congress Party Hears All Ideas On Flood Control

New Orleans, La., May 6.—The need of preventive instead of remedial flood measures was urged upon the congressional delegation which completed an inspection of the Mississipp river flood conditions here today, after a combined boat and rail trip from Memphis, which began last Monday.

At a number of informal hearings, members of the party, which made the river trip heard members of levee boards, engineers and other interested parties give their views as to proper methods of corraling the outlaw river when it goes on its annual "spree." "Levee only" advocates, "spillway" advocates, and those advocating other "sure cures," were given opportunity to express their views informally to members of the congressional party.

Wants Commission.

Harold Newman, president of the Association of Commerce, and members of the local flood control committee, informally urged various members of the delegation to advise President Harding to appoint a special commission, to include the best engineering talent, to work out some plan that will prevent the river from breaking through the levees.

Speaking for the congressional party, Joseph E. Ransdell, senior United States senator from Louisiana, made the following statement:

"We have arrived at the end of a very strenuous, most constructive trip down the flooded Mississippi river. We have viewed the inundated country on both sides of this vast stream, which is the very artery of the North American continent. We are very fatigued, but all of us are carrying back to Washington a most complete idea of the river in flood time.

Many Sights.

"We have seen samples of all kinds of trouble that can come from overflows. We have seen the wreck of fortunes, we have seen the harrowing distress of homeless humanity. We have seen solid bulwarks of earth stand up bravely to the tremendous rushing current of the Mississippi, when it carried the greatest content of water between its banks in its history, and we have marveled.

"Every member of our party was visibly impressed with what he saw, on the down-river trip. Above all they were impressed I believe with the magnificent country behind the levees that must be protected. Therefore, we are taking back to congress a corps of champions that will work night and day for the proper expenditure of money and labor to throw a protection between these fertile fields and the unmanageable Mississippi, whenever proper measures are introduced."

Favors State Mental Hygiene Department In Waycross Address

A state department for mental hygiene should be established in Georgia to correct mental ailments with equally as much emphasis as is now devoted to physical ills, it was advocated by John T. Brantley, chairman of the board of trustees of the state sanitarium, in an address Thursday before members of the southeast welfare conference which met in Waycross.

"A way should be provided," asserted Mr. Brantley, "for admission to the state sanitarium of persons who voluntarily apply for treatment in the consciousness of approaching mental trouble. Separate institutions should be had so there need be no association of the innocent insane with the criminal. Extradition laws should be arranged with neighboring states so that the prompt return of escaped patients may be assured.

"County provision should be made for imbeciles and helpless paralytics who are paupers and without friends or relatives to care for them. This class is hopeless. The sanitarium can do them no good. They are harmless to themselves and to society and can be cared for just as well by county authorities under the direction of a public health officer."

A meeting in the interest of the welfare conference will be held in Macon Monday and Tuesday of next week, it was announced.

Council Clashes With Witnesses At Treason Trial

Charleston, W. Va., May 6.—(By the Associated Press.)—Heated passages between defense counsel and state witnesses in the trial of Wm. Blizzard, for treason marked the three-hour session of circuit court today. Differences between coal operators and miners union as to organization methods furnished material for vigorous declaration by Thomas Richards, coal company president, during his cross examination by T. C. Townsend, who later became involved in another controversy with Fred Holley on apparent contradictions in Holley's testimony.

Richards said that the armed miners and others around Blair, who went into the hills to battle with deputy sheriffs, and their co-defenders of Logan county wanted to take possession of Logan and Mingo counties and administer the affairs of those counties, with guns. When Townsend asked if the purpose were not to organize unions, the witness rejoined:

"Doesn' that carry the other with it?" Do they do it any other way in recent years?"

Holley, whose credibility as to appropriation of union funds for the march was questioned today, had previously testified that Frank Keeney, district president of the union, told a group of marchers' leaders to "go on where you were going." I'm after making a speech in the Danville ball park ordering the march to stop. Holley was not asked further about the Danville meeting today, but testified that from $600 to $800 was appropriated for the use of various men, who took part in the march. He said these appropriations were made at different meetings of the union held almost nightly, while the march was on and he was present at these meetings.

"But you were on the march weren't you?" Mr. Townsend asked as Holley promptly declared that all the requests for money were incorporated and the men appropriated all at one time.

When Mr. Townsend asked if he had not said the appropriations were at different times, Holley hesitated, then said: "I guess I did," and went on to say that he got $175 when he went on the first march but did not participate in the second march, when the other men got appropriations.

Judge J. M. Woods, set Tuesday night for preparing an application for the release under bond of eight men now in the county jail under murder charges concerned in the armed march near

Richard Croker Buried Friday On Irish Soil

Dublin, May 5.—(By the Associated Press.)—Richard Croker, former Tammany chieftain, who died last Saturday, was buried this morning in mausoleum on the ground of Clencairn Castle, the beautiful estate on his native soil of Ireland, where he had spent his declining years. Mass was privately celebrated in the oratory of the castle by Father Kelly, the parish priest, absolution being given by Bishop Miller, who officiated owing to the unavoidable absence of Archbishop Byrne.

Although it had been announced the funeral would be private there was nevertheless considerable assemblage present, including many friends made by the late Tammany leader in his long association on the turf.

The pallbearers in the procession accompanying the cortege to the vault included Arthur Griffin, president of the dail eireann, and Alderman McDonagh, one of the leading members of Eamon De Valera's party. The lord mayor, of Dublin, walked with Mrs. Croker, who also was accompanied by Mrs. C. J. Morris, a daughter of the deceased.

Athers present included James MacMahon, undersecretary for Ireland, and Martin Fitzgerald, proprietor of the Freeman's Journal.

The coffin was covered with violets from Mrs. Croker's widow, surmounted by a wreath of orchids from Mrs. Morris. Another wreath bore the inscription: "In loving memory of our father, from Ethel, May, Howard and Richard Croker."

The reading of the will did not occur today, as had been expected.

M'LENDON SUGGESTS MARITIME EXPOSITION

Savannah, Ga., May 5.—(Special.) In a communication to Savannah's mayor today from Secretary of State S. G. McLendon, who is ex-officio chairman of the state port commission, suggestion is made for a great maritime exposition to be held in Savannah in 1925. The letter is extremely enthusiastic on the subject and already has aroused much interest here. The selection of Savannah recently as the official state port was the immediate basis for the suggestion.

INCREASED FREIGHTS ON TOBACCO BARRED

Washington, May 5.—Proposals of southeastern railroads to increase rates on tobacco moving from Kentucky producing centers for export to New Orleans and other Gulf ports by amounts ranging up to 33 per cent were set aside today by the interstate commerce commission until September 2. The new rates were to become effective today.

Present rates on tobacco from Louisville, Ky., to New Orleans are 45 cents per hundred pounds on unmanufactured tobacco and the new schedule would have made the charges 54.5 cents; from Owensboro existing charges are 42.5 cents and proposed charges would have been 54.5; from Henderson, Ky., present 42.5 cents, proposed 54.5; and from Hopkinsville, Ky., present 47 cents, proposed 47.5. Only the tobacco shipments intended for export would have been effected by the new schedules

How He Cured His Rupture

Old Sea Captain Cured His Own Rupture After Doctors Said "Operate or Death."

His Remedy and Book Sent Free.

Captain Collings sailed the seas for many years; then he sustained a bad double rupture that soon forced him to not only remain ashore, but kept him bedridden for years. He tried doctor after doctor and truss after truss. No results! Finally, he was assured that he must either submit to a dangerous and abhorrent operation or die. He did neither! He cured himself instead.

Captain Collings made a study of himself, of his condition—and at last he was rewarded by the finding of the method that so quickly made him a well, strong, vigorous and happy man.

Anyone can use the same method; it's simple, easy, safe and inexpensive. Every ruptured person in the world should have the Captain Collings book, telling all about how he cured himself, and how anyone may follow the same treatment in their own home without any trouble. The book and medicine are FREE. They will be sent prepaid to any rupture sufferer who will fill out the below coupon. But send it right away—now—before you put down this paper.

IRA THOMAS TO ACT AS COACH FOR LOCAL OUTFIT

Pres. Spiller Declares No Immediate Changes In Management Slated

Old Athletic Catcher to Act as He Did in 1919, When Team Won Pennant. Local Mogul Thanks Fans.

BY MIKE THOMAS.

Ira Thomas is coming to Atlanta Monday, but he is not coming here in the capacity of manager of the Crackers. A couple of years ago, in 1919 to be exact, the pennant-winning Crackers of that distant date were limping badly just as are the present incumbents, and Connie Mack, who at that time had great interest in the local slab, sent Ira here in the capacity of coach, and in a short time this scout had the Crackers snapped out of it, and they started in winning ball games fast enough to cop the gonfalon in the Southern loop.

President R. J. Spiller, on his trip east in search of bright lights in the baseball firmament, talked over his troubles with Connie Mack, and this old fighter suggested that this step be taken, and stated his reasons for thinking this was the proper thing. The reasons that he gave were convincing and Spiller made a deal with Thomas. He reports here to apply his well-known money gland treatment that was so successful in 1919.

There has been an ivory hunter for Connie Mack since he retired from active playing of the game, and to say that he knows a ball player and can see the possibilities in a piece of rough timber would be putting it altogether too mildly. And these powers of looking them over and telling what they are going to make and whether they ever will or not, are going to come in mighty handy when he gives the Cracker payroll the once-over Monday.

President Spiller stated last night that he was exceedingly grateful to the fans of Atlanta for their support of the club even in the middle of their present losing slump, and he promises that it is not going to be very long until those journeying to the Poncey ball orchard are going to see the Crackers winning ball games, not once in a while as at present, but regularly and decisively. He stated that with the new players that were promised him on his trip north and the assistance that Ira Thomas will give the present members things looked considerably brighter than they have in the last couple of weeks, when the Crackers started losing ball games with so much eclat.

To Retain Ellam.

According to the statement of President Spiller there is no plan at present toward replacing Roy Ellam as manager of the Crackers. President Spiller feels that Ellam has the understanding and the punch and the influence with the ball players on the present roster to win games, and that with some new pitching talent that has been promised he will be a winner in the field in little or no time. There is not and there has never been the slightest complaint on Ellam's management of the team.

Thomas, who will work with Ellam, will give him the benefit of the years of experience he had in the majors and will work with the individual members of the club to polish off their rough spots and get them to working together more like a machine than a bunch of individual players. This will be Ira Thomas' work while he is at Ponce De Leon. There can be no yell about two managers, or three of them, or even more, because Ira Thomas is here as a coach.

Thomas, in addition to being a great player and student of the game, is a fine man personally, and this along with his past accomplishments, specially that of making a winner of the 1919 Atlanta club, will get him the attention and the co-operation from the players that he wants. And it may be safely said that with Ira Thomas coaching the Crackers and Roy Ellam as captain, that the Crackers are about due for a change in fortunes that they so richly warrant.

It is thought that before the passing of another week-end that the Cracker pitching staff will be strengthened by the addition of at least tow pitchers, which will give the present pitching staff the necessary reinforecement to allow it to get the usual amount of rest between games.

Crackers Divide Double Bill With Memphis

After Losing Opener 7-3, Crackers Come Back With Clark Pitching

Joe Guyon's Home Run in Second Game Clears Right Field Sign Boards— Crackers Win 5-3.

BY CLIFF WHEATLEY.

Wildness of pitchers at Ponce de Leon yesterday afternoon when the Crackers and the Memphis Chicks split a double bill, failed to exact any penalty, the wilder the hurlers being the better their chances to win. Oscar Tuero, less able to locate the platter than in any game he has pitched locally in a year, mastered Southpaw Suggs, the Atlanta entry, in the first encounter and Rufus Clarke, flinging his first game for the Crackers and keeping runners on the paths all the time won over Webb in the twilight affair. The scores were 7-3 and 5-3.

When wildness is rampant and still the total in the run column doesn't mount to enormous figures, the natural assumption is that mighty little pinch poking was accomplished. Both games Saturday saw few timely wallops, men being stranded in practically every inning.

Inability to connect in the pinches cost the Crackers the first game and the same shortcoming in the second wes responsible for the Chicks' failure to make it two victories and a clean sweep of the four-game series. In the opening encounter eight Atlanta players watched their comrades forsake them and Memphis had a total of thirteen left on bases in the six-inning game which closed the afternoon's entertainment.

Good Time for Batters.

The batters had the time of their lives, few averages suffering in the indifferent pitching that was displayed. Burke, for Memphis, carried off the honors in this connection in the first game with four safeties in five trials, but Critz gave the Chick centre gardener a close race, finishing with three out of four. Dutch Bernsen, with two doubles, was the Crackers' closet candidate in the first. Six doubles were nailed off Suggs and Tuero.

Joe Guyon and Bernsen led the swatters in the second game. Joe contributed three hits in four attempts, one of his clouts being for the circuit and carrying over the right field signboards. This stunt has been accomplished but three times since the boards were erected. Buster Brown, the former Nashville slugger, and Harry Harper were the players who preceded Guyon's performance. Bernsen's longest drive was a triple to the scoreboard. In Thursday's game Tutweiler hit to the same spot and was given a home run, but the umpires declined to permit "Dutch" to travel the entire route, although the ball disappeared, just as Tutweiler's did.

The Crackers overcame a two-run lead in the first game and managed to keep even with the opposition longer than most fans in the stands had expected. Suggs, however, after hurling brilliantly in the early innings tossed away his effectiveness and the Chicks were hammering him hard at the close.

Suggs' Worst Innings.

His worst session started at the dawn of the third and ended at the close of the fifth. In those innings the Bluff City pastimers scored five runs and clinched the struggle. They added two more in the ninth, but these came simply to fatten batting averages, not because they were needed, for the Crackers were through for that game.

Atlanta fans have learned that when it isn't little Tommy McMillan spoiling their entertainment, it's this Burke chap in center field. So when Tommy had been just about stopped in his vicious batting streak by the fork-handed slants of Johnny Suggs, his stable-mate, Mr. Burke hurried to the rescue and his bat kept the local customers on the verge of nervous prostration during the greater portion of the first game.

It took the champion Chickasaws just two innings to realize that it was possible to score tallies off Atlanta's southpaw, who by the way, tacked a no-hit game on them last season. Su-tak began the third by singling to left. He went to second on Tuero's sacrifice and scored on Burke's first hit, a single to center. Consecutive doubles after two were out, gave the Chicks another run in the fourth, Cliff Yockey and Critz furnishing the necessary attack.

It looked bad for the Crackers when they came in for their half of the fourth, but Bernsen drove a double to right center for a starter. Bill Holden hit to Tuero and Bernsen was caught in a chase between second and third, finally being tagged by Shestak, who came a long way to get into the play. Ritter singled to center, scoring Holden, who had reached second when Bernsen was tagged out. Camp's throw to the plate was wide and Ritter drew up at third. He scored an instant later on George Schmidt's sacrifice fly to center.

The Chicks scored three times in the fifth after two were out. Shestak and Tuero were retired by the infield, but Burke secured his second hit, a single to left. McMillan walked. Tutweiler singled to center, scoring Burke, McMillan also scoring when Mayer let the ball get away, Tutweiler reaching second on the error. McLarry singled to right, scoring Tutweiler.

This ended all run-getting until the eighth, when the Crackers scored once. After McMillan had tossed out Sammy Mayer on a brilliant play, Bernsen made his second double, a line drive to right. Holden went out to Camp, but Ritter singled to right and Bernsen registered.

The Chicks added a couple more in the ninth. Tuero popped out to C. Schmidt, but Burke again singled to left—his fourth straight wallop—and stole second, scoring on Ritter's misue of McMillan's grounder, Tommy drawing up at second. Tutweiler singles and McMillan scored.

The fielding features were provided by McMillan and George Schmidt, subbing for Captain Roy Ellam at short. The latter is weak with the willow, but there were certainly no flaws in his fielding exhibition Saturday. Time after time the youngster choked off what appeared to be certain hits.

Second Game.

In the second game, Rufus Clarke, secured by President Spiller from the Baltimore Orioles to bolster Atlanta's faltering hurling corps, won in spite of wildness that threatened to ruin him at various stages. He had little control, but showed considerable stuff at times. Courage, the big fellow possesses in abundance.

The Chicks filled the bases in the first, second and third innings. Clarke got away unscathed in the first two frames, earning the generous round of applause that was given by the fans. In the third, however, after loading the bags without retiring a player, Rufus made Critz pop out to Guyon in short left, but took too big a chance with Smith, the Chickasaw catcher driving a single to right that produced a couple of runs, McLarry and Camp scoring.

The counters knotted the score, the Crackers having scored two runs in the opening session. Joe Guyon started the trouble with his home run clout to right field. Graff followed with a single to left and went to second on Mayer's sacrifice. Bernsen singled to center and Graff trotted home.

The Crackers drew away to the lead once more in the third and were never headed. Mayer singled to center and scored on Bernsen's triple. Holden was an infield out, but Ritter sent a sacrifice fly to Camp and Bernsen scored. A base on balls to McMillan, followed by singles by Camp and Yockey, gave the Chicks a run in the fourth. The Crackers put on the finishing touch in the fifth on a base on balls and two singles.

Tech Wins Final Game From Tenn 9-5

Barron and Edwards Star for Winners

Argument in Fifth Inning Threatens to End Game When Tennessee Pitcher Balks.

BY JOHN STATON.

Tech took another ball game from Tennessee yesterday, 9 to 5. The game offered a multitude of thrills, raging all way from a near free-for-all to spectacular base running by Red Barron. In the fifth inning, the Tennessee coach started to call his team off the field, but thought better of his decision, and played out the game. It happened on a balk decision. The pitcher balked and Sox Ingram walked home. Coach Banks contended that the pitcher had not balked.

"Red" Barron deserves special mention on base running. In the third inning, he singled and waited a ball or two and then lit out for second. When he was nearly down the ball got to the catcher, and he was resting on second. "Sox" Ingram, the next man up, hit a high fly to the centerfielder, and Red took third. A couple of more balls, and Red started for home. He was more than half way in before the pitcher knew what was going on. Campbell made a desperate effort to get him but Red was safe.

Tobe Edwards had a big day with his bludgeon. He got three hits out of four trips. Harry Allison tried to crown half the Tennessee team, but outside of that he pitched a fine game. He set eight men down via the strike out route, and only allowed one man a free pass.

Tech Starts Early.

Tech started off the fire works in the first inning. Eddie Morgan got a hit and Griffin flied out to left field. Banon hit one to the pitcher, Griffin going to second. Ingram saved the day by doubling to the stands. Tobe Edwards started his hitting rampage got a bingle that score Sox. Hill went out short to first.

In the third came that spectacular base running of Captain Barron, the most thrilling event of the day. In the fifth Tech had a big inning, aided by the balk of Pitcher Cantwell. Eddie Morgan went out pitcher to first. Griffin drew a bye and Barran got a hit.

Ingram walked and the bases were full. Tobe Edwards got a hit scoring Griffin and Barron, and sending Ingram to third. Ingram went home when Cantwell balked and Tobe took third. Baum was safe on an error. Both men scored on Palmisino's hit. Little Joe was out trying to stretch it, and the side retired.

In the seventh Edwards played the leading role. Barron and Ingram, the first two men, went out. Tobe got his third hit of the day. Hill walked and Tobe stole third while Hill was chasing himself around in a trap. Hill was safe at first and the Tennessee team started out to argue. Campbell left his position and Tobe used his and stole home. Baum walked, and Palmisino was out second to first retiring the side.

Tennessee Scores.

Tennessee broke into the scoring class in their half of the fourth. The first two men up, Keister and Lane singled. Whitmire flew out to Barron, and the men did not try to advance. Campbell walked and Blair got a hit scoring Keister and Lane. Campbell, the next man up flew out. Williams was safe on an error and Blair scored on the play.

In the fifth Tennessee got two more. Cantwell, the first man up got a hit. Smith was hit by a pitched ball and Cantwell advanced a base. Keister got a hit through short and Cantwell scored. Lane flied out to Griffin and Smith was out trying to take home on the throw in. Campbell doubled, scoring Keister. Blair fanned.

Bishop relieved Cantwell at the beginning of the sixth inning. By winning the final game Tech gets the series, and an improved rating. Now watch the Golden and White next week against Washington and Lee.

HERMAN KAYOED BY DANIEL CUPID

New York, May 6.—Dan "Kid" Cupid, who battles successfully in classes, yesterday added "Babe" Herman, Los Angeles, California, featherweight, to his list of victims.

It was the second time this week that Herman had tasted defeat. On Tuesday night he went out in the first round from the sling shot punches of Vincent "Pepper" Martin, of Brooklyn.

"Babe's" defense was poor yesterday. The "Kid" penetrated his guard soon after the gong rang and landed a terrific punch to the heart.

"Kid" Cupid carried "Babe" to his corner to Mrs. "Babe," formerly Miss Edna Rody. "Babe" entered the ring under his real name, Herman J. Souza. He had no excuse for his defeat.

TARHEELS DEFEAT TECH

The tennis team of the University of North Carolina defeated the Georgia Tech team yesterday at East Lake, by the score of 5 to 1. The Tarheels got off to a bad start, but after losing the first match in the singles won every other event on the card. All the games were hard fought and the North Carolineans were much impressed with the tennis of the locals, stating that these matches were the hardest that they had taken part in this season.

These matches today were the last that will be played locally before the S. I. A. A. tournament that starts at East Lake on Thursday May 11, and continues through until Saturday. Last year the doubles in the S. I. A. A. were won by Blake and Williamson, of Tech, and the singles were won by Moss, of Tulane, who defeated Blake, of Tech, in the finals. A large entry list is expected for this event.

The Tech tennis team is made up of Orton Blake, E. G. Williamson, R. S. McIver, Jr., and K. G. Matheson, Jr. The North Carolina team was Tench Coxe, F. Coxe, R. A. Johnston and G. S. Bruton.

In the singles at East Lake Blake, of Tech, defeated T. Coxe, 6-8; 6-2; 9-7 in the first match. F. Coxe defeated Williamson 6-2; 8-6. Johnston defeated McIver 8-10; 9-7; 7-5 and Bruton defeated Matheson 6-4; 6-3.

In the doubles Coxe and Coxe defeated Blake and Williamson 6-3; 9-7 and Bruton and Johnston defeated McIver and Matheson 6-3; 6-2.

H. J. Foster, of Atlanta, won the main event of the three-day Georgia State Trap-shooting tournament that started here Thursday at the traps of the Atlanta Gun club. The shoot was finished on Saturday morning and Arthur Cuscaden, also of Atlanta, won the professional title. In both the amateur and professional events at the end of 200 targets there was a tie, Foster and Henry Jones, of Macon, each having broken 195 birds. Tied with Cuscaden was Walter Huff of Macon with 196 birds.

In the amateur event Foster won when he broker 20 straight in the shoot-off while Jones was breaking 18. Cuscaden also made a perfect score in the shoot-off while Huff missed one.

Parrish, Atlanta; Dr. J. H. McDuffie, Columbus, members of the executive committee.

One of the events in which there was a great deal of interest was the ladies' shoot, which was won by Mrs. J. C. Wright, who broke 159 out of 200. Mrs. H. N. Alford was second in this event, with a score of 150 out of 200.

He was a member of the staff of the Detroit Free Press in his youth and later became editor of the Canadian Sportsman, and sporting editor of the Toronto Globe.

For fifteen years following he was sporting editor and dramatic critic of the Times-Democrat, of New Orleans. He was on the staff of the Morning Telegraph here when he died.

MICHAEL FINN DROPS DEAD

Omaha, May 6.—(By the Associated Press.)—Michael J. Finn, 61, part owner and business manager of the Omaha Western league baseball club, pitched forward in his grandstand seat at today's game with Tulsa and died without regaining consciousness 15 minutes later. Heart failure was given as the cause.

Mr. Finn's collapse occurred in the first part of the third inning and followed a home run hit by "Yank" Davis, a Tulsa player, with one man on base. Mr. Finn and his family arrived in Omaha only last night from Hot Springs, Ark., where he was recuperating from a heart attack. He attended today's game against the plea of Mrs. Finn, who said tonight she did not think he was strong enough to withstand the excitement.

Following Mr. Finn's death the game was called. The score stood 3 to 2 in the visitors' favor with Tulsa still batting.

Mr. Finn entered baseball as a left handed pitcher, being with the Portland, Me., club of the New England league in the '80's. Later he managed teams in Newport, R. I., and Rochester, N. Y.

For eleven years he was connected in a managerial capacity with Southern association clubs, being with Little Rock seven years, Memphis two years and Mobile two years. During his baseball career he was scout for the New York National league and Detroit American league clubs.

Surviving him are his widow, a daughter, Catherine, 18, and a son, David, 21, the latter residing in Boston, Mass.

Sixteen hundred fans were in the stands when Mr. Finn collapsed and when the game was called filed in a hushed procession through the exits within a few feet of his body.

EDGREN DISCUSSES FORMER INVADERS OF ENGLAND

Dempsey's Invasion Is No Novelty; Pugilists Have Traveled Route Since 1810

Molineux Was First Invader 112 Years Ago and Most Fighters of Prominence Have Invaded the Old World.

BY ROBERT EDGREEN.

Jack Dempsey's livasion of the old world is no novelty. Other American champions have been going over with fair success ever since boxing became an international sport. The first was a Virginia darkey—a boxing sailor named Tom Molineaux, who claimed that his father had been boxing champion of America.

Molineaux had his first fight in England Jul. 24, 1810, a hundred and twelve years ago. His opponent was a Bristol man. The fight lasted an hour, at the end of which time the English fighter, to quote a local account of the day "was so severely punished that it was impossible to distinguish a single feature in his face."

Next the darkey fought Tom Blake, known as "Tom Tough," who was seconded by Tom Cribb, the English champion, and Bill Gibbons—who may have been an ancestor of the fighting Gibbons family.

Molineaux mauled Blake for eight rounds, finishing him "with a tremendous hit on the head that completely took all recollection out of him," as an English sporting writer quaintly described it. He knocked out a number of other opponents, one of whom was "Rimmer Lancaster." Molineaux knocked Rimmer out with a "dread one stomacher" in the fifteenth round, upon which the crowd broke down the ring and attacked Molineaux "from the antipathy felt against a man of color proving the conqueror." Freeman, the American giant..

"Boxiana" describes the scene, as follows:

"The confusion was beyond everything, sticks and whips at work in all directions, ten thousand people in one rude commotion."

Twenty minutes later Rimmer, being on his feet again, a ring of men surrounded the battlers and the fight was continued. Molineaux then beat Rimmer to a pulp. Later Molineaux was twice defeated by Tom Cribb, with some assistance from the crowd, which had no mind to see an English champion beaten by a foreigner.

Charles Freeman of New York, a circus arcrobat, six feet ten inches tall, went to England and became heavyweight champion about a hundred years ago.

In later days John C. Heenan, the Benecia Boy, went across to fight Sayers, the English heavyweight champion. Heenan was a much bigger man than Sayers, and in spite of the English champion's fine skill was beating him badly when the crowd broke down the ring and stopped the fight.

The referee called the bout a "draw," and championship belts were ordered given both men. Sayers received his, but Heenan's belt was not paid for, and he never got it.

Jake Kilrain fought Jem Smith of England for the championship along in 1887 in Belgium. The fight went 16 rounds—London Prize Ring rules—and when Smith was whipped the crowd broke down the ring and attacked Kilran to prevent a knockout. The referee hurried back to England and next day gave a delayed decision, calling the fight a "draw." In the old days Americans found tough going on the other side.

Jack O'Brien's Campaign.

John L. Sullivan went to England and challenged Jem Smith, but couldn't get a fight. He claimed the international championship.

Bob Fitzsimmons went to England on a trip, but they had heard of Bob and nobody would give him a battle.

In 1901 Jack O'Brien skipped over to England and had a wonderful time among the English heavyweights. O'Brien was a shifty light-heavyweight, cunning and skillful, with a fair punch and plenty of gameness and audacity. He didn't have much of a knockout record at home, and was headed off from any available championship by the existence of Bob Fitzsimmons, Tom Sharkey, Jim Jeffries, Kid McCoy, Gus Ruhlin and a host of good fightin' heavyweights.

But in England he looked a world champion. He cleaned up Harry Smith in three rouns, Jack Thompson in two, George Crisp in eleven, Harry Newmier in six, Jack Scales (champion) in six, Dido Plumb in six, Mike Lynch in three, Jack McDonald in one, Jasper White in two, Harry Smith in three, Cock Robin in three, Jack Scales (again) in one, and Frank Craig in seven. O'Brien was champion of England while in that country, and was gathering in the coin like an oil well shark.

Kid McCoy was the one boxer in America more cunning and foxy than O'Brien. The two had a "gentleman's agreement" to avoid each other, but the news of O'Brien's clean-up in England was too much for McCoy. He decided to put one over on foxy Jack. McCoy was the better fighter of the two. He would bop over to England unexpectedly, take O'Brien by surprise and publicly challenge him and force him into a match. Then he'd trim O'Brien and all the glory and theatrical dates himself.

McCOY CHALLENEGS "ANY THREE IN ONE NIGHT."

McCoy landed in England unheralded, but foxy Jack had an underground wire somewhere and knew he was coming. O'Brien flitted up to Scotland and trimmed a couple of easy marks there. McCoy, missing him, quickly planned stunt that would make O'Brien's feats look like a copper cent to a Waldorf waiter.

He offered to fight any three men in England on the same night, with ten minutes rest between fights, and knock them all out or forfeit the purse!

His challenge was accepted and he was matched to fight Dave Barry, Jack Madden and Jack Scales. He knocked out Barry in two rounds, Madden in four, and Scales in a round.

McCoy was a master boxer with a punch, and a mind so keen and cunning that he acknowledged no mental equal in the ring but Bob Fitzsimmons.

McCoy liked to have his little joke; Jack Scales, when I saw him fight at Whitechapel, was a thick, squarebuilt fellow, rather fat, and as slow as a dray horse. McCoy knew he could knock Scales out easily, but preferred to dot it by trickery, just because winning by trickery amused him. As Scales stepped up to meet McCoy in the first round the Kid stopped and dropped his hands, looking at Scales' feet and laughing.

"Why don't you tie your shoe laces?" asked McCoy.

Scales looked down. There was only one blow struck and the referee could have counted a hundred.

I saw Scales afterward, and he said he'd been beaten by "a blawsted Yankee trick," and was very indignant. But I think he was lucky, for McCoy might have had a notion to let him stay a few rounds and cut him to ribbons.

Seeing that O'Brien had dodged him McCoy jumped back to New York, and O'Brien returned to England to beat Charlie McKeever and Yank Kenny.

A TITLE BOUT FOR $200.

Jim Jeffries visited England when he was champion, and found no one to fight him. He went through some stage stuff and crossed to Paris. There the French people wanted to see him in a contest and Jeff's manager cabled across to Jack Scales and dicted him terms to fight Jeffries in France.

"Not a penny less than forty pounds," Scales cabled back. So the champion of England went to France to meet the champon of the world, for a purse of $200! The fight was a joke, of course. Jeff tapped Scales on the stomach, and Scales dropped his hands and said: "Hi sye, don't be so bloomin' rough. Hi'm not 'ere to be killed." So Jeffries let him off easy.

Jack Johnson lived in England for a while, but found nothing exciting to do. Tommy Burns went over and knocked out Gunner Moir, English champion. Sam Langford invaded and knocked out Iron Hague, a promising giant of a man who might have been something if he'd not run against the toughest 200 pound man in the world so early in his career. Frank Moran, Joe Jeanette and other heavies have browsed in English pastures.

But since Jeffr time no man comparable to Dempsey has gone from America to England. Dempsey may do well on the stage and in giving exhibitions, but as far as fighting is concerned he's going to have a dull summer—unless a large dusky gent known as Harry Wills takes it into his head to travel too. There's no color line in England.

Dempsey's Trip Quiet Compared With Others

Motorcycle Championship Races At Lakewood On Saturday, May 20

Large Entry List, Including Many Local Favorites, Will Compete in Races.

Enthusiasm is gradually taking hold on local speed fans for the National Championship Motorcycle races to be held at Lakewood, Saturday, May 20, when riders from every corner of the continent will come to Atlanta to compete for titles in the big speed carnival.

Sensational side-car events, which have never been held before in the south, will feature the thrilling program that has been prepared and the races will be held with the sanction and under the rules of the M. and A. T. A. Entries that have already been received at Secretary Striplin's office list some of the leading motor riders of the world and as far as prominent riders are concerned the liberal purses that have been hung up have already assured the fair officials that the meet will be a big success.

Tickets will be put on sale downtown to avoid the congestion and confusion in handling the crowds at the entrance gates at the park that was experienced when the tremendous crowd attended the automobile races that featured the opening of the season a few weeks ago. Secretary Striplin and President Oscar Mills have both assured the fans that they will not experience this trouble again.

Gilbert in Charge.

Hal Gilbert, local track expert, will be in absolute charge of preparing the track for the coming event and he states that the big oval will be in ideal condition by the time of the races. Sufficient time was not had to fix it for the opening but there will be ample time to put it in shape for the national events that will be held on the 20th.

The chemical which was to be used on the track to prevent dust did not arrive in time to put it down for the auto races and the management was very much disappointed that the fans had to put up with this discomfort on the opening of the season but they are assured that there is enough of the dust preventitive on hand now for several meets and that there will absolutely be no dust this time.

Entry List Large.

Entries that have been received so far at the fair office include such famous riders as Gene Walker, from Birmingham; Floyd Dryer and Paul Anderson. Walker holds the present world's straightaway record, having traveled 115.79 miles per hour on a motorcycle. This is faster than any other person ever rode a motorcycle. Gene established this mark at Daytona Beach in 1920.

Floyd Dryer is a favorite in the side-car events that have been arranged for the Lakewood program. He holds the side-car championship which includes all records from one to twenty-five miles.

Paul Anderson, one of the best known riders in the country, is a favorite in the solo events and he holds several world's records himself. At South Bend, Ind., last year he made the motor world sit up and take notice when he clipped several world's records on a half mile track.

SOME NEWS BITS

BY UNITED NEWS

NEW YORK, MAY 6.—George Whitted, the aged infielder, outfielder and bench-warmer, sold to the Kansas City club of the American association, will have to take his ticket and go, per orders, notwithstanding his demand for unconditional release as a ten-year-old major leaguer.

Examination of Whitted's service record in the majors disclosed to President John Heydler, of the National league, that George has completed less than ten full seasons in the big time. Therefore the Brooklyn club was under no obligation to consult his wishes in disposing of him.

Whitted wanted to find his own employment, and is reported to have received an offer to manage the Richmond club of the Virginia league. He may appeal to Judge Landis.

THE NAME OF Jack Dempsey's next opponent is still in the hat and Tex Rickard wears the derby. Confusion was complicated by receipt of information attributed to Dempsey himself that he was thinking of fighting Jess Willard in Michigan City, Ind., on Labor day. Rickard is quietly thumping the tub for a Dempsey-Willard fight in Jersey City arena, but is content to await Dempsey's return before doing business. Meantime the proposed match is receiving a merciless panning in the east and the demand is growing that Dempsey give Harry Wills a chance. Harry Greb still expects to box Dempsey in Philadelphia July 4.

MANAGER FRED MITCHELL, of the Boston Braves, uttered serious accusations against the Boston weather man in explaining the poor showing of the Braves so far. These sensational charges blamed the cold weather for all the defects in the Braves' pitching, and Mitchell promised great improvement as soon as the days get warmer.

ANDY CHANEY, the Baltimore featherweight, one of the cleverest boxers in his class, probably will get the next bout with Pepper Martin, of New York, who stopped Babe Herman here this week. Martin is being boomed for a fight with Johnny Kilbane, but examination of his fighting record shows that he has been beaten by men with whom Chaney had little trouble.

THE HOBART BAKER memorial fund has become an intercollegiate affair, with 39 different universities and colleges represented on the list of 1,200 or more graduates who have subscribed. The fund now amounts to $168,146, of which $100,000 was contributed by a "Mr. Anonymous." The money will be used to erect a skating rink at Princeton in honor of "Hobey" Baker, hockey and football star who was killed fighting in France.

GEORGES CARPENTIER has resumed his practice of sending cablegrams to Madison Square Garden. Capentier signed last fall for a fight here with Tom Gibbons, but never fulfilled his agreement. Now he has accepted a bout with the winner of the Gene Tunney-Harry Greb fight for the American light-heavyweight championship, which is to be scrapped late this month. He is dickering also for a return fight with Jack Dempsey in London, so the Garden promoters are not very confident of putting him on.

JESS WILLARD has written to Tex Rickard, reminding him that he, Jess, has been living the simple life and is in fine shape to begin training for a return fight with Dempsey. Rickard believes Willard is one of the few fighters with a good chance to beat the champion. The promoter will try to arrange a battle at Boyle's Thirty Acres about Labor day if Dempsey does not accept a fight with Harry Wills about that time.

Georgia Sweeps Auburn Series; Wins Final Game by Score of 3-2

Game a Pitchers' Battle Between Pantone and Moulton—Clarke's Single Wins.

Montgomery, Ala., May 6.—(Special.)—A long single by Clark, scoring Pantone and Cody won a pretty ball game here this afternoon, Georgia defeating Auburn, 3 to 2, before a crowd estimated at 5,000. The contest was a pretty pitchers' battle between Pantone and Moulton, with the former weakening in the eighth, giving up three hits in this inning.

Moulton and Pantone worked slow and deliberate, the Georgian receiving better support at critical stages of the game. Moulton had a fast underhand ball that worried the Bulldogs, causing nine to retire by the strike-out route. Pantone forced three to strike out.

Auburn scored in the third when Richardson was allowed to score when Scott was hit by a drive from Shirling's bat, the bases being loaded at the time. In the same inning Moulton was called out on a questionable decision at home plate. In the fifth Scott's single, a stolen base and an error by Cody paved the way for Auburn's last run.

Georgia Scores.

Georgia scored in the fourth without a hit, an error by Scott of Thomason's grounder. Boney hit to Scott, who threw to knowles, but Umpire Bonifay called Boney safe, claiming that Knowles took his foot off the bag, Thomason scoring on the play.

In the eighth Pantone singled after one out. Cody sent a high fly to Creel, who caught the ball, but when he collided with Hixon, he dropped the ball. The Tigers claimed that Creel had held the ball for a put out, but the umpires failed to allow the claim. Hutchinson struck out, and Clark with the count three and two singled, scoring Pantone and Cody.

FULTON HIGH WINS FROM 7TH A. & M.

Powder Springs, Ga., May 6.—(Special.)—In one of the hardest fought and most interesting games of the season on the local diamond the Fulton High nine defeated the Seventh District A. & M. school yesterday by the score of 3 to 2. The game was a beautiful pitchers' duel between Snipes for Fulton and Jones, of the Aggies. Both were given poor support at times.

Fulton was only able to connect for four safeties, while the Aggies garnered seven bits. Fulton scored first, sending a runner across in the first inning. Another was added in the fourth frame. A. & M. tied the count in the sixth with two doubles, a single and an error. Fulton won the game in the ninth inning after one man was down, Holcomb singled to left and took second on a wild pitch. A. Wilder was given a free pass and a few minutes later he got into a trap. Holcomb started for third and when Vaughon, A. & M. first baseman, threw the ball away he scored.

For the winners the pitching of Snipes and the fielding of Holcomb at third was the feature. Vaughon's work at first and Jones' pitching were high lights for A. & M. The game was a scheduled seven-inning affair, but the score was tied at the end of the agreed time, two extra innings being used to break the tie.

LEONARD-TENDLER MEET ON JULY 4

Michigan City, Ind., May 6.—Floyd Fitzsimmons, boxing promoter for the American Legion post here, announced tonight that Lew Tendler, the Philadelphia lightweight, would meet Benny Leonard, the lightweight champion, in the arena here July 4.

BIG PURSE FOR DEMPSEY-CARP

Paris, May 6.—(By the Associated Press.)—A purse of $490,000, 75 per cent to go to the winner and 25 per cent to the loser, was offered Jack Dempsey, world champion heavyweight boxer, this afternoon for a return match with Georges Carpentier, the European champion, to be held in Pershing Stadium sometime next autumn, the day before the Grand Prix race scheduled for June 24.

The Associated Press correspondent was present in a hotel room here when Lewis Verande, representing a group of French financiers, made the offer to Dempsey. He also offered the champion $10,000 a week to sign a six weeks contract to appear in the largest music hall in Paris.

Dempsey told the correspondent he would do nothing regarding either offer until he heard of the result of negotiations now in progress between Jack Kearns, his manager, and British promoters for a match between Dempsey and Carpentier in London.

M. Verande, when seen in his office by the correspondent, said he preferred not to give out the names of the financiers he was acting for, but it was learned that one of them is a member of the French nobility and the owner of one of the largest stables of the French turf.

Dempsey later said his offer to meet all comers included Harry Wills, the negro boxer. "I have no desire to draw the color line," said the champion. "If the American public wants me to meet Wills I will do so. He is a much less dangerous opponent than Jess Willard."

Dempsey, who had intended leaving for London this evening, has postponed his departure indefinitely until he hears from Kearns concerning today's offers.

MANY ENTRIES FOR TOURNEY

Entries for the Georgia State Amateur Golf tournament are coming in steadily, and according to a statement from the tournament chairman, Lloyd Parks, the largest entry list that any state tournament has boasted of since the classic was inaugurated at Brookhaven in 1916 is in prospect.

According to the present entry list Perry Adair will be the leader from the local colony of golfers, who will endeavor to wrest the amateur title from the present holder, Montgomery Harison, of Augusta. Bob Jones has not entered the event to date, and it is not likely that he will, owing to the rush of graduation activities at Georgia Tech, where Bob is very much of a student these days.

Many of the towns in south Georgia are expected to send entrants in both the individual and the team events. Thomasville, Valdosta, Americus, Moultrie, Quitman and Albany have been invited especially to send in delegations.

Local Entrants.

Besides Perry Adair, Atlanta will have Victor Smith, Tess Bradshaw, Chick Ridley and Veazey Rainwater, state champion of 1920; Milton Dargan, Jr., Charlie Black, Jr., Moose Knowles, Walter Keenan, Johnny Green, "Little Billy" Jones, Dr. T. P. Hinman, Bill Spalding, Jim Dickey, Sam Dinkins, Lloyd Parks and Bill Glenn. Henry Todd, Bill Price, T. T. Williams, Charlie Strong, Phil L'Engle, Bob Schwab, Bob Martin, Bowie Martin, Dick Gray, Dana Belser, Carey Baker, Al Bailey, Ernest Ottley, Red Watkins, Bill Kingdon, Charlie Elvea, Wimberley Peters, Al Thornwell, R. P. Jones, Jim Floyd and others.

Golfers who have any designs on the state title are requested to send in their name to Lloyd Parks, Druid Hills Golf club, and the entrance fee may be paid at any time prior to teeing off on the morning of May 18 on the qualifying round.

PETRELS WIN FROM 'BAMA

Tuscaloosa, Ala., May 6.—(Special.)—Oglethorpe evened the series with Alabama here today with a 6 to 3 victory over the Crimsons. Heavy hitting by the Petrels and good pitching by Morris were responsible for the victory.

Alabama scored first on Elmore's double and Oliver's single, but Oglethorpe tied it in the third. David, who gathered in three singles for the visitors, drove in his team's first run in this inning. The Petrels pounded Steen from the mound in the fifth, getting three hits and two runs before Mulkey relieved him. Mulkey was hit hard in the sixth, four hits being converted into three tallies. Cunningham succeeded Mulkey and retired the Petrels without trouble during the remainder of the game.

'Bama Rallies.

Alabama rallied in the ninth when Elmore got his third single. David stopped Davis' apparently sure hit for a putout and killed the rally at this point, although an outfield error gave Oliver safety at first. Morris pitched well throughout, allowing only two earned runs to be scored off him. David and Elmore each led their respective teams in hitting with three bingles, while Sims and Hinton, of Oglethorpe and Alabama respectively, each drew a triple. The fielding of Oliver in center field for Alabama and the work of David and Price for Oglethorpe were features.

"PUTTING THE NEXT ONE OVER"—WITH "DUGGBAER"

FOLLOWING USUAL annoying hospitality of hipping our clients off to new Paris at?yes, our pet telegram has arrived from Europe loaded with expensive news.

PARIS is incubator of style eggs. Most of which seem to spoil after being uncrated in New York.

SKIRTS WILL be worn shorte this summer. If posible. Skirts will be worn shoter. If any. Idea is to make women comfortable.

IF SHORT skirts are comfortable, we'd hate to see women dressed in height of luxury.

COLORS WILL be red and white. Like barber shop. You can either wear your dress with trimming. Or none at all.

STYLES NEVER stop escaping from Europe. Every new fashion means hubby has to clamber into turmoils of industry and claw up new bank roll. Enough to make married men rattle down to river and play aiddlywinks off end of wharf.

NEKCS WILL be worn high and long. Faces will be long. Fashionable waistline will not be fixed by foreign decrees, as that constitutes violation of four-power treaty.

DIVORCE GOWNS and alimony trousseaus are among dresses necessary to bridal parades in fashionable Fifth avenue alienation courts.

THERE IS dress for every occasion. But if dresses get any skimpier, ladies wil be dressing like there wasn't any occasion.

STILL, LADIES ain't far in front when it comes to being steamed up over clothes. Men ain't going around in barrels, either.

THEY'VE GOT to have lapels, spats and other mechanical aids to beauty.

MEN MAY come and men may go, but Brooks Brothers go on forever.

CONDITIONS IN SPORT FIELD CALL FOR REMEDY

A. A. U. Definition Differs From Those Usually Accepted Regarding Real Amateurs

Definition Setting Line Between Amateurs and Profesionals and Paid Coaches Needs Revision in U. S.

HUGH S. FULLERTON.

Whether the present disturbed condition of amateur athletics in the United States will result eventually in the adoption of new definitions of amateurism remains to be seen. But it is morally certain that if the new National Amateur Athletic Federation acquires the growth that it now promises to do some amendments will be made to the definition of amateur.

The subject is one which is liable to start endless argument. The definition of an amateur now used is practically standard all over the world. The A. A. U. definition is not exactly the same, although it has only variations in the wording, and the intent is the same as the universal code.

There are, of course, some rather ridiculous features to the amateur rules—or things that seem ridiculous—than ought to be in. As an instance, one of the rules that make a professional is that any person who wagers upon an athletic contest in which he is a competitor becomes ineligible to compete—in other words, ranks as a professional.

How many golfers in the world could qualify as an amateur under that rule? The fact is that practically every golfer has at some time or other wagered a ball or two on a friendly match. Yet, if any organization should have the temerity to drop that rule there would be a wild howl that it encourages betting. The rule is very necessary and was made to prevent athletes from betting on contests, especially those in which they are engaged.

A WAY AROUND THE DIFFICULTY.

There is a way around the difficulty which would leave the word unchanged. As a matter of fact, there are three British high court decisions which distinctly make a line between betting which is gambling and friendly wagers. Often these British court decisions have been quoted in Amcrican courts as tending to justify betting on horse races, although no lawyer ever yet has put it over an American court. In one famous English case the court ruled that wagering upon horse races was not gambling. The decision, of course, was due to the circumstances in that particular case, where it was shown that the wager was a friendly one and not for gain, but the language has been construed to mean that any betting upon horse races is not gambling—which is more ridiculous.

The big problem of change in the definition of an amateur is that regarding the status of coaches. Under the rules of amateurism any person accepting money for services in coaching or training athletes becomes a professional.

It is quite ridiculous to rate Dr. Raycroft, of Princeton; Professor Stagg, of the University of Chicago, or scores of men of that caliber as professionals merely because in addition to other duties they have supervision over the training and development of athletes. They are in the majority of cases faculty members devoting a great part of their lives to teaching amateurism, to uplifting the ideals of boys and men and doing the finest sort of work for amateurism—yet branded as professionals.

A WAY OUT OF DIFFICULTY.

There is a way out of that difficulty, which has been found, for instance, in the Far East Athletic association. Seems that we older organizations often have to go to the newer ones for their ideas, simply because, starting afresh, they are not hampered as we are by traditions and politics.

The idea is this: To place athletic coaches in a class by themselves, designated as non-competing amateurs. That is, they are not eligible for any competition, but are rated as amateurs, because they teach amateurs. If a coach or trainer coaches or trains professionals, he would, of course, be a professional.

The point appears to an unprejudiced outsider a mere technical one, but it hits about 320 college coaches and their assistants; it hits 600 Y. M. C. A. coaches and about 30 K. of C. coaches (and will hit more, as the K. of C. athletic development is rapid).

KEY COURSE CLUB FORMED

Formal organization of the James L. Key Municipal Golf club has been completed, according to announcement Saturday. The club was formed Friday night at an enthusiastic meeting of players who patronize the city's course in the third ward. They gathered in the mayor's office.

Victor E. Green, vice president of the South Boulevard Improvement club, was elected president. Other officers are Joe Gluck, vice president; R. C. Ailor, secretary, and Clem House, treasurer.

On the governing board, which will co-operate with the city finance committee and other officials in obtaining appropriations for the course, as well as supervising club matters in general, are Councilman Charles E. Chosewood, Mayor Key, Lambdin Key, R. J. Juncken, Jasper Loeb, Sam Schoen and W. H. Smith. Five additional board members will be elected at the next meeting of the club.

Membership is open to all local golfers. Dues will be decided on after a conference of the governing board with city authorities. Committees are as follows:

Grens committee: K. J. E Rutter, chairman; C. N. Downer, W. F. Walter, Jules Manassee, Paul Lee and Karl E. Farmer. Rules committee: Clem House, chairman; Joe Gluck, Lambdin Kay, Allan Asher, Larry Doyle, M. D. Baker, R. C. Ailor, H. G. Bromberg, Henry McNally, J. C. Hixon, Gabriel Schoen and R. P. House. Tournament committee: Lambdin Kay, chairman; Morgan Blake, Ed Danforth, Cliff Wheatley, Charles F. McGrath, John H. Keifer, O. R. Keeler, Paul Lee, J. A. Harper, J. F. Cochran, Joe Gluck and Dan Patterson.

GRAVES WINS GOLF TOURNEY

The National Freight Traffic golf tournament, played at East Lake Friday, was won by a former Atlanta Athletic club star, I. L. Graves, by defeating J. C. Lincoln in the finale, 3-2. The consolation trophy in the first flight was won by Russell Houston, of Louisville, Ky., which gives the reader some idea as to the attendance from the different parts of the country.

In the second flight E. S. LeGette, of the Atlanta Athletic club, was winner with A. R. Fay, of Chicago, as runner-up, and Carl Howe, of Chicago, won the consolation. In the third flight G. E. Boulineau, of Atlanta, was winner; D. M. Goodwyn, of the Louisville C. C., and Fred Zimmerman, president of the C. I. & L. R. R., was winner of the consolation.

In the medal play handicap competition W. H. Glenn was winner with a net 77, in the Class A event, and Horace F. Smith was winner on the Class B event. W. J. Morrison and Mr. Graham won the best ball foursome competition.

VOLS AFTER SHORTSTOP

Nashville, Tenn., May 6.—(Special.)—With Outfielder McCormack in camp the Vol bosses are working with renewed efforts toward landing a shortfielder to fill the boots of Mike Fuhry. Manager Doyle informed the home president via long distance that he was after a shortfielder while in Birmingham, although he never mentioned from what club he may be coming. Meanwhile, Prexy Sloan delivered a check for the purchase of Mike Fuhry and inquired as to the prospects of landing Gaffney, the brilliant infielder who now adorns the bench in Louisville, or any other first-class man to plug the glaring hole on the infield. Fuhry's inability to hit has been the cause of much grief to Vol fans, although they have pulled hard for the willing youngster in view of his fancy fielding and conscientious effort. But Fuhry can't hit .200 in this league for the season, and a man with a bat is wanted badly.

This Gaffney party attracted the attention of Manager Doyle when the team was in Louisville. At that time the Colonels were unwilling to sell him, although they intimated that he might be obtained for a price of $4,500 "later on." While this figure is almost prohibitive for any Southern league club, it is barely possible that the foxy Cap Neale's sights may be better adjusted at an offer of real cash.

McCormack Looks Good.

Eddie McCormack reported to the team and gained favor with Manager Doyle on first appearance. He is a man of build similar to Spoke Emery, is a left-handed hitter and a southpaw thrower as well, giving the Vols two gardeners who heave from the wrong side. He is only 22 years old and is touted as an exceedingly fast man. Last year was his first in professional ball, although he hit .293 for the season in the South Atlantic and was improving as the season ended. He should be able to fill the rightfield position in good shape. A trial will soon tell.

YOUNG GETS RAZZ FOR WAITING 'EM OUT

Ross Young, of the New York Giants, learned to his sorrow that the fans in New York, and the critics, too, do not care for the alibi stuff. In a recent game, Young was called out twice on called strikes while trying to wait out pitchers. In both cases Young flared up and offered vehement protests. On both occasions the patrons of the sunbaked seats gave Young the razeberry and several days later he was called to task for his show of temper by three sport scribes.

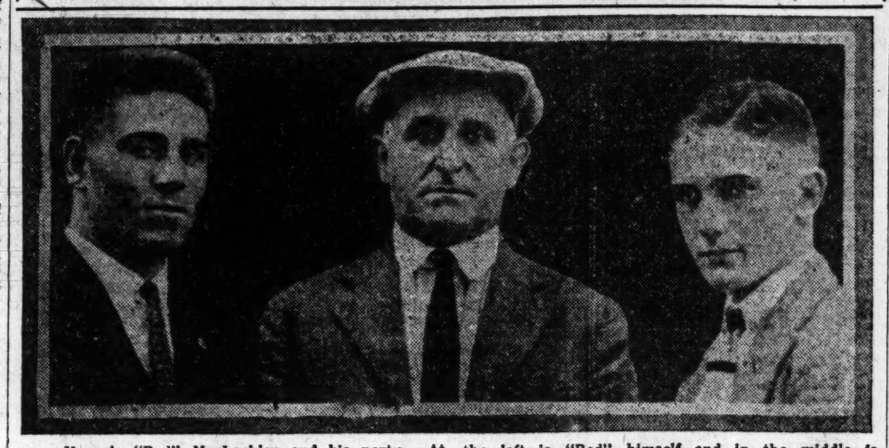

COLLEGE PLAYERS GETTING LEAGUE TIPS

Jack Barry, coach at Holy Cross college, and formerly a member of Connie Mack's famous $100,000 infield, declares college teams will furnish more high-class youngsters for the big leagues in years to come than they have in the past. The reason assigned is that most of the colleges are now employing former professionals for coaches, and these men are able to help the lads develop along proper lines. He says eastern college teams he has seen in action this year show some exceptional talent.

Monster Crowd Is Assured for Bout Between Jake Abel and Red McLachlan

Here is "Red" MacLachlan and his party. At the left is "Red" himself and in the middle is Billy St. Mary, MacLachlan's manager. On the right is Paddy Crawford, a flyweight also under St. Mary's management who will fight on the card.

BY FUZZY WOODRUFF.

There is every evidence that there is to be a greater and more enthusiastic hegira to Ponce de Leon park Tuesday evening than there has been since that eventful April afternoon when Atlanta discovered that the Crackers were not exactly all that they should and of a right ought to be. Ever since the newspapers of Miami, Fla., brought the tidings to Atlanta that Jake Abel had taken a pasting at the hands of an unknown little warrior named Red McLachlan, there has been no fight really talked of in this fair city outside of a return go between the old local favorite and this 142 pounds of crimson topped fury. Wherefore, the hegira to Ponce de Leon Tuesday.

The ball lot will be the scene of their return battle, which will be staged under American Legion auspices. It will be a fight too, don't worry. Abel smarted under that defeat at the hands of McLachlan as he never smarted under defeat before. He has gone about the business of avenging it purposefully and grimly.

He first took a long, long rest, accompanied by the famous baths of Hot Springs. Then in a quiet way he began getting in shape. Those on the inside say that Jake will shape up against McLachlan perfectly. They insist that if McLachlan wins there will be no alibi as to condition.

ABEL PROBABLY THE FAVORITE.

Despite the fact that MacLachlan won on their last meeting and made a tremendously impressive showing before Atlanta fans when he cuffed Larry Avera pretty much as he elected for ten rounds, Jake will probably go into the ring a favorite to win with a majority of the crowd.

In the first place, precedent is a hard thing to overcome and Atlantans are accustomed to making Abel the favorite when anyone outside of a champion is to be encountered.

Then the Abel supporters believe implicitly that Jake was in nothing like condition when he met MacLachlan. They say that Jake, never having heard of MacLachlan, took him on as a set up and was in no shape to step along with a man who carries the fight as fast as MacLachlan does. They do say, however, that despite this poor condition, Jake emerged from the battle without serious injury.

This time, they know that Abel is in shape and believe he can match ring cunning, boxing ability and clean hitting with the ferocity of the Saginaw Scot's attack.

HOW MACLACHLAN FIGURES.

MacLachlan, looking every inch the fighting man, was around Atlanta Saturday. He looks in perfect shape for the match. He is accompanied to Atlanta by Billy St. Mary, the ancient trainer of the famous Kid Lavigne, another Saginaw Kid, who won the lightweight title.

Red isn't worried over the reports of Abel's fine condition. "We'll simply step a bit faster" he says. "I don't thing Abel will have much chance to box with me. I can't box and I know it, but I can fight and I know that too, so the thing I'll do is to make Abel fight. He'll have to fight if he stays in a twenty-foot ring with me."

And it is pretty hard to see how a customer can box MacLachlan. He is always leading, always rushing, and when he is missing with one hand, the other hand is already on the way to his opponent's jaw or mid-section.

Jake may beat him. Jake has beat a lot of good ones, but I'll venture this prophecy: If Jake does beat him, it will be the best battle that Atlanta has seen since the second Jimmy Perry-Eddie Halon fight.

COMING INTO his own.

IS FRANK Ellerbe, young third sacker of the Browns.

FRANK HAS been trying to convince the big league critics for a couple of seasons that he is ready to take rank with the young stars of the game. Now he has established a clear title to the third basing job with the Browns.

THE BROWN fans have been sweet on Frank ever since one notable day when he played against the St. Louis crew as third baseman for the Nationals late in the 1919 campaign. He drove in four runs in each game of a doubel-header. One smash came with the bases loaded.

ELLERBE WAS born in Marion, S. C., December 25, 1895. He received his preliminary baseball experience with the University of the South and Wofford college. Then he signed with Bennettsville in the Pee Dee league in 1916. The next season he went with Bainbridge. On his return from war service with the navy he joined Binghampton, N. Y., grabbed by the Washington club before the season ended. He broke into 28 games for Griff that fall, fielded well and batted .276. Last year he was traded to the Browns.

Question of Records Discussed; Camp Says Improvement Certain

Many Records Lowered and Timing Must Be Improved and Made Scientific.

BY WALTER CAMP.

New York, May 6.—How far will our record breaking go? It would be indeed a venturesome man who concludes that we have reached the limit in anything. In the last 46 years we have improved the sprint record 10 per cent; the records for the quarter mile up to the mile, 15 per cent; the high hurdle and the high jump nearly 20 per cent; broad jump one-third and the shot put nearly 60 per cent.

The rumor has reached this country from Honolulu that Charlie Paddock ran the 100 in nine seconds. Few indeed will be those who will believe this, or even who believe that within the next decade or perhaps within the next fifty years the feat will be performed. And yet one must hesitate to say we have reached the low point in any record of physical prowess.

There are undoubtedly many records which will be much lowered. Last Saturday saw the two-mile relay and the four-mile relay records lowered. But team running is a different thing from individual running and there will be a reduction of middle and longer distance records and possibly we shall see in the sprints still more fifths of seconds cut off.

Time of Hundred.

But not for a long time will any runner cover the hundred yards in nine seconds on reliable timing. And this brings up another point of special interest. The writer has commented on it before. Our records are not valuable in the sense of comparisons. Our timing is not scientific, as it depends entirely upon the personal equatation of those holding the watches and those watches always vary when produced at the finish of a possible record-breaking event. There are means of scientific timing which would show us absolute comparisons between the flash of the gun and the breaking of the tape by the individual runner.

But to continue. The time of the intercollegiate meet were: One hundred yards, 11 seconds; the 440, 50 1-2 seconds; the 880, 2 minutes 16 1-2 seconds; mile, 4 minutes 58 1-2 seconds; high hurdles, 18 1-4; broad jump, 18 feet 3 1-4 inches; high jump, 5 feet 4 inches; shot put, 30 feet 11 1-2 inches. When one considers what the records are today he is minded to accept almost anything reasonable for the future.

Improvement Certain.

Compared to the present records it seems foolish to say that we shall not go on improving and lower further these records. But to do that in certain of the lines we shall have to have one of two things—either better training, coaching or better men. Now probably America has reached very nearly the height of scientific development in the matter of training men for specialties, and in coaching them in form and style so as to produce the maximum amount of speed. The writer doubts very much if we are going to get further along in this line. Then it comes to a question of either better men or better conditions—that is, a track which might be unusually fast. In the latter probably we have not reached the best yet, and the clipping of a fifth of a second may come through that line. Now as to better men, prodigy appears once in so often. Thompson, of Dartmouth, in the hurdles is one of these. Paddock in his sprinting is another. But they come once in a blue moon.

Newsy Tees for Golfers

The best ball foursome tournament played at Druid Hills yesterday boasted of a distinguished entry list, and most of the foursomes that finished in the money on the opening day were combinations of youth and age. Charles Black, Jr., and Jim Floyd had the low gross ball for the first eighteen and fine 72 and Billy Jones and Dana Belser shot a best ball of 76 for the second prise, and R. P. Jones and Bob Jones finished third with 77, and Perry Adair paired with Henry Todd was fourth with a 79. This was really the qualifying round of this tournament and the first round must be played by the night of May 9. Pairings for this first round will be posted Monday. The rains during the past week were just what the greens at Druid Hills needed to put them in shape for the tournament season that gets under way at full speed this month, and the course is right now in the best shape that it has been in for months.

THERE WAS NO tournament at East Lake on Saturday, but the tournament season will get well under way during the next week. This course is in fine shape and the rains last week put the greens in mighty fine shape. The usual large number of golfers were out yesterday.

THE BALL SWEEPSTAKES that was played at Brookhaven yesterday was won by J. H. Taylor, Jr., who shot an 89-20 for a 69. His was the best score in a field of forty.

M. N. Elmer finished second with a 90-26, 70, and C. B. Blakeman was third with a 99-28, 71.

Milton Dargan was low gross among the competitors with an 81.

THE REGULAR BROOKHAVEN tournament season opens next Saturday with the Adams-Cates trophy as the incentive. The qualifying rounds will be played Friday and Saturday, and match play starts on the following Monday.

HOWARD BECKETT is shooting a mighty fine game at present, and without any practice to amount to anything last week went out Saturday and turned in a 75. The first annual tournament of the Professional Golfers' association will be played over the Brookhaven course June 6 and 7. Seventy-two holes of medal play will be played by the entrants in this tournament and $500 in prize money has been put up by the Capital City club.

IT IS EXPECTED that the Brookhaven lake will be opened for swimming in the near future. The tennis courts are being placed in fine condition and some of the courts will be illuminated, making night play possible.

MASCOT TRYIG TO GO TOO RAPIDLY IN EAST

Billy Mascott, the Pacicle coast battler, made his debut in Brooklyn recently against Paul DeMeres. He managed to get away with a shade in his premier, but the critics advised him to remain away from the high-class boys until he perfects his defense.

Mays Blanks Athletics.

Philadelphia, May 6.—Only 29 batters faced Carl Mays as he blanked Philadelphia by a 2 to 0 score. The Athletics got two scattered hits, made by Ed Miller. Harris pitched good ball, but a triple by Pipp, Ward's single, Dykes' wild throw and sacrifices by Scott and Mays gave the Yankees two runs in the eighth.

Addie Bennitt, the Yankee mascot, was knocked unconscious by a bat thrown by Devormer.

OVERLAND PRODUCTION REACHES 400 DAILY

Production of Overland and Willys-Knight cars has now passed the 400 daily mark.

April production exceeded that of any April since 1917 and even with this large production orders continue to exceed it.

The company is employing 8,000 workers. It is adding to the force gradually and carries daily advertisements in the papers for skilled mechanics of various kinds.

A statement of the company says that "Willys-Overland orders continue greatly in excess of production in spite of the fact that shipments exceed those of any April since 1917."

Without a dissenting vote perferred stockholders of the Willys-Overland, at a special meeting, ratified the proposal of the directors for funding of Overland bank debt by a $17,500,000 7 per cent bond issue. The bond will mature Dec. 1, 1923.

The action of the preferred stockholders constitutes one of the most important steps in the placing of Overland finances on a permanent, sound basis.

The management will make no predictions as to probable yearly production of the company, but it is understood that if production during the entire year is maintained on the basis of the first quarter, the Overland will have enjoyed one of the best years since the war.

Difficulty in getting raw materials is holding back production to some extent not only with the Overland but with many other Toledo companies. This is especially true of steel products. Operating on greatly curtailed programs the steel companies were unprepared for the sudden reopening of business on so large a scale.

JAKE ALLEN WITH AUTO SERVICE AND SUPPLY COMPANY

Jake C. Allen, formerly with the Georgia Motor company, and a well-known local young man, has assumed the management of the Auto Service and Supply company, at 45 East North avenue.

This concern is handling a line of automobile equipment and tires, and conducts a service and storage garage. They handle a good volume of storage for patrons living in the vicinity of the Georgian Terrace.

TEGDER HEADS HANSON SALES ORGANIZATION

Announcement has just been made of the appointment of J. C. Tegder as director of sales and advertising of Hanson Motor company. He is one of the best known automobile men in the south, having been connected with the wholesale distribution of the Haynes, Cole and Lexington cars, and more recently the Paige dealer here.

Previous to coming south in 1912, Mr. Tegder was sales manager for a large northern factory. The month of May this year will round out a period of eighteen years' connection with the automobile industry, so that Tegder is a full-fledged member of the "Old Timers" club. His combined factory-distributor-dealer experience should mean much to the Hanson organization, both to Hanson dealers and Hanson owners.

J. C. TEDGER.

The Hanson production schedule for April of five cars per day has been doubled for May, and already the factory is behind its orders. The outlook for business is unusually bright, and orders are coming in from all sections of the country, and especially from the New England states, where Hanson cars are well represented and favorably known.

Agencies have just recently been opened up at New Orleans, Pittsburg, Milwaukee, Cincinnati, Knoxville and other well-known points. Agency contract has also just been closed with Scott-Young, Ltd., of Australia, for Hanson representation there, and orders placed for twenty Hansons per month. This is the largest export order booked by the company to date. Cars have also been shipped during the past year to Sweden, Denmark, South Africa, in all of which countries Hanson cars are giving splendid service and making a reputation for durability, economy and reliability.

FAT ELROD JOINS CHEVROLET FORCE OF WOODWARD CO.

Fat Elrod, one of the well-known young legioneers, with strong proclivities for selling light cars, has joined the retail sales force of the Woodward Motor company.

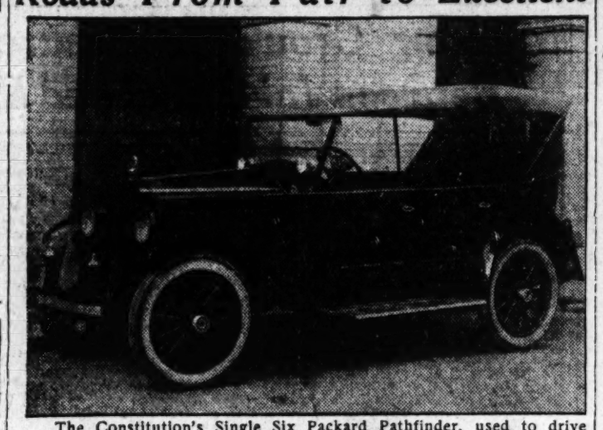

"Fat" has been connected with either the wholesale or retail sales of light popular priced cars for a number of years. His connections being with the Chevrolet Motor company, the Georgia Motor company, A. L. Bell Isle and C. E. Freeman.

"Fat" says the first cars he ever sold were Chevrolets, and with the new four ninety models, he is glad to again cast his lot with this line of popular light cars.

Atlanta to Canton and Return

CONSTITUTION LOG NO. 45

Roads From Fair to Excellent

The Constitution's Single Six Packard Pathfinder, used to drive 13,000 miles of roads to compile accurate information for tourists.

Canton, Ga., has long been a place sought on spring and summer days by Atlantans. It was included in the list of resorts and motoring objectives, the routes to which were mapped and logged by the motors and highways department of The Constitution last year. The fact that more than 500 reprint copies of this log were distributed later, in addition to those clipped from the paper and saved by Constitution readers, proved that not all Atlantans knew of it.

It has been relogged this year. Several slight changes in the roads making it advisable. Canton offers very little in the way of amusement, but the drive is through some beautiful country scenery, and one finds much in around Canton to excite curiosity and admiration.

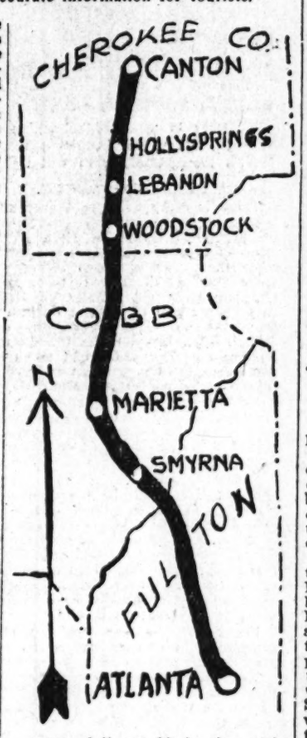

The Hotel Canton serves a special noon-day dinner each Sunday for motorists who make it a one-day trip. However, the trip may be made easily in an afternoon.

The roads are good to excellent, except for a stretch of four or five miles which is being repaired, and will soon be in good condition.

The Pathfinder.

The Constitution's single six Packard Pathfinder was used to drive this trip, as with 13,000 miles of road logged previously. On this trip as on every other trip, the Pathfinder performed beautifully.

The same day that this log was compiled, the Pathfinder was driven over a little less than 100 miles of roads not shown in this log—they being unfit for motor travel. Of the 13,000 miles of roads driven with the Pathfinder, more than 1,000 has been roads where very little or no motor traveling is done. Notwithstanding this fact, at no time has so much as a minute's time been lost because of trouble or lack of satisfactory performance.

BUICK SALES INCREASE, SAYS BYRON H. KING

The slogan "Business Is Better" much used by business concerns during the past few months is a fact as well as a slogan, according to a statement issued by B. H. King, manager of the Buick Motor company's Atlanta branch. Mr. King states:

"A chart prepared by our sales department, which is shown elsewhere in this paper, depicts the volume of Buick business during the past six months. The curved line represents sales to consumers made by our dealer organization in the states of Georgia, Alabama, Florida, Tennessee and South Carolina. From a low level in the second week of December there has been an upturn, slight in January and February and a very decided upward slant in March and April.

The chart is of general interest for this reason: Buick at all times has enjoyed a large volume of sales, and the curvature of Buick sales undoubtedly reflects better business conditions in the southeastern territory served by this branch. As a matter of fact our business shows an increase of 80 per cent for the first quarter of 1922 as against the first quarter of 1921, and we confidently expect a good sales volume for the year 1922; in fact, we would not be surprised if we experienced a Buick shortage during the next two months."

J. H. SOMMERS HEADS PACKARD ENTERPRISES

Samuel K. Dick to Devote Entire Energy to Local Sales Organization.

J H. Sommers, for the past two years with the Packard Motor Car company of Detroit, has been appointed manager of Packard Enterprises of Georgia, Inc. Mr. Sommers assumes the duties of officials not actively connected with the organization during the past year, and removes some of the duties of Sam Dick, so that he may in the future devote his entire time to the sales organization.

Mr. Sommers is a young business executive who has made rapid advancement during the past several years. While with the Packard factory he was entructed with many matters of the greatest importance, as well as his regular duties.

The management of the Packard Enterprises has been vested in Mr. Sommers, leaving Mr. Dick's time free to further develop his sales organization.

Mr. Dick is a salesman and sales manager who has been highly successful in the fine car field, and both he and Mr. Sommers feel that with his entire time free to push this end of their business, that their excellent sales record of the past year will be greatly exceeded this year.

The new Single Six models are begining to arrive in quantities, but shipments are not sufficient to supply the demand. Mr. Sommers stated Saturday that shipments promised for May delivery were already sold and that he expected a more acute shortage in Single Sixes, with a somewhat lesser shortage of the Twin-Six and trucks, within the next six weeks.

ZANDER COMPROMISES SUIT AGAINST "BIM"

Mrs. Zander, Uncle Bim and the lawyers in their marital triangle are visiting the Hill-Yarborough Motor company this week-end. The purpose of the visit, according to Mr. Yarborough, is an attempt on the part of Uncle Bim's attorney to induce the widow to accept a Studebaker car as heart balm.

It was deemed advisable to bring the widow to the show rooms of the local Studebaker dealer, in order to have the selling ability of this excellent sales organization to assist the attorney in persuading the widow that the Studebaker car which has been proffered, would be more desirable than the large sum of money for which she is suing. The latest reports Saturday evening indicated that the widow had been entirely convinced that the Studebaker would readily heal all the scars which the rich Australian Studebaker dealer had inflicted upon her young and tender heart.

Headlight Reflectors Replated by Simmons In Less Than a Day

The Simmons Plating works announce that they have installed equipment which enables them to replate automobile reflectors and other articles in a very short time.

Henry Simmons states that there are comparatively few motor car owners who are aware that they can have their rusty or scratched headlight reflectors replated, so that they will be as efficient as new ones, and that a great number of those who know that this is possible, are of the opinion that it will require several days.

The equipment used by this company makes it possible to return completed work of this time, without the inconvenience of the motorist, so that there is no longer an alibi for the person who tries to drive with reflectors that do not properly light the road.

If the earth turned around in about an hour and a half, instead of in 24 hours, things would have practically no weight at the equator.

PACKARD SALES SHOW GREAT IMPROVEMENT

As an indication of the activity now prevailing in the motor car industry, Packard Motor Car company's sales for April were in excess of $6,500,000, or more than half the company's total business for the first six months of its fiscal year beginning September last.

Although sales of twin-sixes and trucks showed marked improvement, the greatest activity centered about the company's new single-six model. Sales of single-sixes during April were in excess of 2,200 cars, most of these being the new model, which was first shown April 20. Four days after this car was announced, its sales at retail amounted to over $3,500,000.

According to President Alvan Macauley, the purchasing power of the public for automobiles is much greater than was gnerally believed a few months ago. Says Mr. Macauley, "A survey of the conditions now prevailing among automobile manufacturers in Detroit and elsewhere, indicates that the tide of business is much stronger than anyone anticipated. Some of the factories, in spite of largely increased working forces, will experience difficulty in producing enough cars to fill the orders now coming in. This is true of the Packard company.

"Two months ago, the increased demand for cars appeared to be only a seasonal upturn, which would soon be over, and preparations were made accordingly, but now it is apparent that better-known concerns at least have entered into a period of sustained activity.

"The Packard company, which two months ago had planned to produce a thousand sixes monthly is now working on the basis of 1,500 cars monthly, a fifty per cent increase, and expects to go on a production basis of 2,000 sixes monthly in a short time."

Now It Is Thoughts of Touring Shakespeare Said It Was Love

In the spring the motorist's fancy happily turns to thoughts of touring.

The kindly sun transforms a well-ordered office to a prison, spring flowers beckon, country roads are hurried into shape for tourist traffic—and the time immemorial call of the great outdoors becomes an imperative summons.

The Wills Sainte Claire roadster, pictured above, is made to lend wings to the wooded hill and winding white ribbon of the open road.

It answers the call of adventure.

BF BETTER FILMS

CONDUCTED BY THE BETTER FILMS COMMITTEE OF ATLANTA

MRS. OMAR F. ELDER, EDITOR

Editor's Note—Through the generosity of the editors of The Atlanta Constitution, this space has been granted the better films committee of Atlanta for the exclusive use of propagating its purposes and ideals. The committee is most appreciative of this conclusive evidence of their willingness to co-operate with and substantially assist in this material way, the exploitation of a movement to better the atmosphere of motion pictures. Not until the general public lends such support, will the committee be able to function in the manner to which they aspire. It is to this end that they are working most assiduously and through these columns will be chronicled their activities and news items of interest to those who are in sympathy with the movement. A maximum reading public is earnestly desired—a reading public who will follow the committee's efforts and assist in the crusade for better films.

MRS. OMAR F. ELDER,
Director of Publicity.

The report of the findings committee of the Southeastern conference of Better Films has been submitted to the members of the conference. The report has already been published in full in The Constitution.

TWELVE FILMS PASSED BY BOARD; NONE CUT.

The National Board of Censhorship has had a busy week.

Back in New York the board reviewed twelve future First National attractions. Not one scene was eliminated from any of the photoplays. The photoplays will next be reviewed privately by the most prominent dramatic critics in New York, who will be asked to make suggestions regarding any possible eliminations which could be made.

It is not likely that the dramatic critics will be able to find anything in the First National attractions which might displease, for every one of the twelve photoplays was censored by the Independent Screen artists' guild before it left Los Angeles. The guild is composed of 40 of the most prominent producers and stars in California.

The twelve photoplays which passed the final tests of the board of censorship are Constance Talmadge's "The Primitive Lover;" Buster Keaton's "My Wife's Relations;" Norma Talmadge's "Smilin' Through;" Thomas H. Ince's "Skin Deep;" Charles Ray's "The Deuce of Spades" and "Smudge;" Katherine McDonald's "The Infidel" and "Domestic Relations;" Anita Stewart's "The Woman He Married;" Mack Sennett's "On Patrol;" Ben Turpin's "Step Forward;" Charlie Chaplin's "Pay Day," and J. Parker Read's "Pawned."

MOVIE CATALOGUE IS NOW OUT.

According to statement issued by the National Committee for Better Films, affiliated with the National Board of Review of Motion pictures, the yearly catalogue, "Selected Pictures," has just come off the press and is ready to go to exhibitors, educators, parent-teacher associations, school and community centers and others who have previously become acquainted with its usefulness.

The seventh annual edition of this catalogue list 775 motion pictures drawn from the product of all companies and selected by the experienced and disinterested review members of the National Board of Review.

Besides listing the title of the picture, with the producing company and release dates, etc., the compilation gives other important information, such as the number of reels, the star, a brief description of the type of picture, whether an original story or the novel, story or play from which it was adapted and its particular suitability for audiences classified as young people between the ages of 12 and 16, and young people of any age, for the family, for church entertainments, or for adults only.

The catalogue includes a scope of pictures ranging from one reel, scenic, educational picture or comedy, through the two-reel comedy and drama, the five-reel feature to the massive productions of eight and ten reels.

Information regarding the catalogue may be had by applying to the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, 70 Fifth avenue, New York.

Hudson Gasoline Economy Proven By Walter Dunn

Walter L. Dunn, one of the best known local retail automobile salesmen, and a director of the J. W. Goldsmith, Jr.-Grant company, believes in having the complete facts about the merchandise he sells.

With this thought in mind he recently made some interesting tests on gasoline consumption, with his Hudson car. Disconnecting his gasoline tank, and installed a one-gallon gasoline container.

WALTER L. DUNN.

With this gallon tank, Mr. Dunn made five complete tests. In making each test, he specified the conditions under which the test was made, so that his results would not be misleading.

His tests results varied from eleven to more than nineteen miles per gallon, according to the conditions under which the test was made.

The figures of these tests, which are certified as correct, by Mr. Dunn, are:

Driving through city traffic 11 miles.

City traffic and trip to East Lake, 14 miles.

Non-stop, using lean mixture, 16 8-10 miles.

Non-stop and coasting, 19 6-10 miles.

City traffic and trip to East Lake, 14 7-10 miles.

These tests show the Hudson car to be more economical, as far as gasoline consumption is concerned, than many have believed, and this step of Mr. Dunn's, in ascertaining the facts, is considered by the officers of his firm as being a constructive step in the right direction.

THREE BROTHERS INJURED IN CRASH SATURDAY NIGHT

Three brothers were injured in a collision between a motor truck and the automobile in which they were riding at the corner of Highland and St. Charles avenues Saturday evening. The injured men are C. B., Xnor and Harold Callaway.

The truck which is said to have been the cause of the accident was driven by a negro whose identity could not be learned, although witnesses say they have sufficient evidence to ascertain who the driver was. Those who saw the accident say that the truck crossed Highland avenue, going at a rapid rate and in a reckless manner. The police are conducting an investigation.

ATLANTA COMPANY WILL SOON ERECT HOTEL IN AUGUSTA

Contract to erect the Richmond hotel, the $650,000 hostelry proposed for Augusta, has been let to the Griffin Construction company, of Atlanta, it was learned Saturday. The hotel will be one of the finest in the state.

The structure was designed and is being financed by Atlantans. G. Lloyd Preacher & Co. drew the plans, and G. L. Miller & Co., mortgage bond brokers, are selling $350,000 issue of mortgage bonds for the promoters of the hotel.

In England the use of chewing gum is confined principally to coal miners, factory workers and other industrial employees who cannot smoke at their work.

GROW TIRE COMPANY OPENS RETAIL STORE

Announcement was made Saturday by E. P. McElroy, southern manager for the Grow Tire company, that on Monday, May 8, the company will open a direct factory retail store at 294 Peachtree street to give service on Grow tires.

In making this announcement, Mr. McElroy says that Grow tires have met with such wide distribution in the south and particularly in Atlanta that a retail service store is essential to the interests of both the company and Grow users. He says that his company has under construction an addition to their plant at Canton, Mass., which, when completed, will double their daily output.

"Like other large concerns of the north and east," said Mr. McElroy, "our executives see in the south the possibility for ever-increasing all-year-around distribution and we are beginning now to make the southern trade a permanent part of our expansion."

Atlanta Will Be Studebaker Town Says Yarborough

J. E. Yarbrough, of the Hill-Yarborough Motor Company, distributers for Studebaker cars, says Atlanta is rapidly becoming a Studebaker town, and that 1922 is more of a Studebaker year than any previous year. The statement is based on sales figures for his organization since his connection with it was announced last November. According to a statement prepared by this organization, their sales in April were 971 per cent greater than in November, 1921.

Each month has shown a substantial increase over the previous month, since last November. The average monthly increase is 58.2 per cent. April was the largest Studebaker month as far as Atlanta was concerned ever recorded, but this fact did not keep Mr. Yarborough from accepting a challenge tendered by Knoxville for percentage increase in May. The winner of this challenge is to bring his entire sales organization to the place of the loser and be entertained for two days, at the loser's expense. The first week shows the two cities running neck and neck.

Kid Rash Is Billed.

Kid Rash, a colored bantam boxer, of New York, is being billed as the second George Dixon. Rash has whipped all the good colored bantams down east, and is particularly anxious to get into a ring with some of the first-flight bantams among the white boys. Efforts are being made to get Rash a bout with Pete Herman in Pennsylvania.

LOWERY AUTO LOCK APPROVED BY THE UNDERWRITERS

William Lowery, vice president of the Lowery & Blakeman company, has returned from Chicago where he went to appear before the examining board of the Underwriters' laboratories with his latest invention, the Lowery free-wheel steering wheel lock.

Final and complete tests of Mr. Lowery's invention have been made by the underwriters and the lock has been passed for approval by them.

This test and approval, while no more than was expected, is very gratifying to the new firm as it was one of those necessary details that must be attended to before the firm goes into quantity production for the trade. Machinery is being installed for manufacturing at number 22 Nassau street and the lock will be on the market about June 1.

Mr. Lowery is a well known local business man and inventor with several highly successful patents to his credit, but his enthusiasm for the Lowery free wheel lock, indicates that this will be his most successful contribution.

PROMINENT AUTO MAN TO MARRY IN JUNE

The many friends in Atlanta, both in the business and social world, of Robert Bartow Stallworth, of New York, will be interested to learn of his approaching marriage to Miss Elizabeth Phillips Adams, of Birmingham, the wedding to occur in June in Montgomery.

Mr. Stallworth is well remembered in Atlanta, where he resided for some time, being financially interested in the automobile business here. His home is originally in Jackson, Ga. At present he is making his home in New York, where he has been for the past three years, and where he is actively interested in one of the largest Ford dealerships in that city. He is also interested in large Ford dealerships in Atlanta, Birmingham, Montgomery, New Orleans and Alexandria, La.

ROBERT R. STALWORTH.

Mr. Stallworth and his bride will spend three months touring Europe on a honeymoon trip, sailing from New York on July 4.

During his residence in Atlanta, Mr. Stallworth made a large circle of friends, all of whom will wish for him a long life of happiness and prosperity.

J. W. Smathers Sells Pierce And Wills Sainte Claire in Georgia

J. W. Smathers has secured the Wills Sainte Claire and Pierce Arrow franchise for Georgia, and has leased the building at 359 Peachtree street, where sales and service will be maintained in the same building. H. B. Odell, probably the best known old time distributors of fine cars in this territory, is associated with Dr. Smathers, and will have charge of the sales department.

Hilliard Spaulding who has been identified with the sale of fine cars in Atlanta for a long time, and Jack Lamar, are members of the retail sales organization.

Dr. Smathers states that a special effort will be made to give Wills Sainte Claire and Pierce Arrow owners a mechanical service in keeping with the cars, and that a complete line of body styles will be available whenever possible.

However, the steady increase in automobile sales over the entire country, and the number of sales piled up by Mr. Odell's organization last week indicate that it may likely be impossible to keep a complete stock of body designs in Atlanta. Even now, it is stated, it is difficult to get prompt shipments from the factories.

HARRY WHITE WINS OVER KID BLAIR

Syracuse, N. Y., May 6.—(Special.) Harry White, the Niagara Falls featherweight flash, received the judge's decision over "Kid" Blair, of Utica, here tonight in a ten-round bout. White showed more class than any featherweight ever displayed in a Syracuse ring and has all the ear-marks of a champion. Syracuse promoters will make every effort to match Harry White and some top-notcher in the near future.

It has great beauty. It is comfortable to the point of being luxurious.

But the thing that people tell each other most often, is that it is almost impossible to wear it out.

We are still supplying parts for the first Hupmobiles ever built, 12 and 13 years ago; and these cars are in use today all over the world.

Back of Hupmobile long life and reliability is the fact that its important parts and its precise shop practice, are similar, and as fine, as are employed in manufacturing the highest priced cars.

Drifting Families Should Heed the Call 'Get Together'

To Save Homes and Stou the Drift Towards the Rocks.

(The following is issued by the Committee on Church Co-operation.)

Have you ever watched a family drifting towards the rocks?

Bill Smith and his wife are on the way. No real reason for it. Good stuff in both of them. But lately, neither seems to see the good in the other. Bill has apparently forgotten that Mrs. Bill has any rights of her own. And Mrs. Bill's tongue has developed a cutting razor edge, which reaches the mark usually at mealtimes, when she tells of the "doings of the Joneses" and what "some men do for their families."

Before the wedding, several years ago, Bill couldn't jump fast enough to pick up a handkerchief dropped by the future Mrs. Bill. But now, if a work-basket slips, and a half-darned sock goes one way, and spools, scissors, thimble and other odds and ends fly about the floor, Bill, if he happens to be at home, keeps on smoking and reading the paper, while Mrs. Bill does the picking up.

Maybe she was thinking of this at the early breakfast, when the coffee was late and weak, and Bill grum, and Mrs. Bill remarked: "That was a mouthful and the truth about a stenographer marrying just swapping a business position, with pay and an eight-hour day, for a twenty-four hour job, without pay, as servant girl, scrub-woman, and cook."

The name "Bill Smith" is made up by us. But, if with all-seeing eyes, we could look into the flats and houses of our world, how many such scenes, and worse, should we see?

Not all confined to husbands and wives. Equally evident is the drift of many parents and children toward the rocks of separation.

Sizing Up Father.

To the material man, it is most difficult to recognize and respect the developing personality and rights of his son just coming into manhood. And, living behind the scenes with "the old man," and watching with the keen questioning eyes of youth the shortcomings of the father at home, while seeing only the best and attractive side of the fathers of other boys, and the men met by him, the son too often loses the respect due to the father and his opinions.

Not so often, but only too frequently these things are equally true of mothers and daughters.

"Honor thy father and mother" is "the first commandment with promise," but side by side with this commandment, Paul wrote, "Ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath"—

Too many times respect for older people is lacking in the young. But not infrequently, what is taken for lack of respect, is the unfolding of the power, which, rightly guided, will make a worth-while character of the developing man or woman, but, wrongly handled, or left without guidance at the critical time, will make an almost hopeless wreck of the life.

When to these dangers in a home is added the peril of a father and mother divided and bickering, forcing the children to take sides with one or the other, what can come from such a home?

To all endangered drifting families and homes comes the call, "Get together." If they would escape wreck, they must get together on a common ground, husbands and wives, fathers and sons, mothers and daughters, respecting the personality and rights of each other, and facing the facts of life together.

The Whole Gospel.

The first of all facts is God. Getting together with our Maker and with one another is the whole gospel of Jesus Christ. "Be ye reconciled to God," is the plea of Paul, and throughout the New Testament, and the pages of history, may be seen an ever growing multitude of men, women and children drawn to our Father in Heaven, and to one another, by the indwelling spirit of the living Christ, who died upon the cross to teach men, women, and children their relationship to each other and to God, and to so draw them together.

Families founded upon this rock do not drift apart. Millions of homes today are being made stronger, and are being linked together with one another in the most powerful fellowship ever known, by an even stronger tie than that of blood, Christ, living in their hearts, uniting them, and ever drawing them to God.

And the family is the picture of every relationship in life.

Here will be found the way to stop the drift apart of capital and labor.

In those plants, where the employer and employee meet upon a mutual ground, the employer respecting the employee, and his rights, as a man, and the employee repaying in kind, there are no labor difficulties.

The Laughing Devils.

Three thousand strikes a year in industry in the United States!

Are they any more or less than a repetition, on a gigantic scale, of what we have seen in the homes of Bill Smith and others drifting towards the rocks?

Why should we be threatened with a coal famine by a strike in our coal fields?

Some say the trouble there is due to the over-production of coal. With men in the west burning corn for fuel, while elsewhere little children are dying of hunger, and every winter, millions shivering for lack of fuel, the imps of hell must laugh, while the angels in Heaven weep, at hearing this suggestion that too much coal has been produced.

Whose is the sin, we do not undertake to say, but sin it is that causes the stopping of the production of a necessity like coal. And would not sin and strike vanish away, if the men, engaged in the strike on both sides, would get together and honestly face the facts of life together as children of God, who owe not only a duty to each other, but to millions of mothers and children, countless men and women, who must have coal to live?

Is there any problem, whether family, industrial, civic, racial, national or international that will not disappear before the honest application of the gospel of "get together?"

Atlanta's recent revival in which 120 churches united is an illustration. That revival is still going on. Only last Sunday, 100 people united with Immanuel Baptist church.

Get Together.

Do they, who have recently joined the church, and we, who have been members for a long time, realize the full meaning of that call, "Get together," to us?

Our membership in the church proclaims to the world that we are together in a fellowship, which nothing in hell nor on earth can break. A fellowship, formed not to give our city an advantage over other cities. Not to enable the members of the fellowship to get an advantage in politics or business, which non-members cannot hope to have. Not to give us the strength to impose our peculiar ideas upon the other fellow. For none of these. But a fellowship, formed only for service. A fellowship, whose single outstanding purpose is to break through the gates of hell, and bring to men, women and children everywhere the liberty and more abundant life, which Jesus, our Master, came to give.

A fellowship to prove the presence of the living Christ in the hearts of His people, uniting them in one great family, all children of Almighty God.

There can be no drift towards the rocks of separation among the members of such a family answering the call of God to get together.

Tires With 500 Nail Holes Leak No Air

A new puncture-proof inner tube, which in actual use was punctured 500 times without showing the loss of any air when tested by a tire gauge, has been invented by Paul B. Coates, an electrical engineer of Chicago.

It is inflated with air and has the same appearance as the regular inner tube, yet it removes all the necessity of changing tires until the casings are entirely worn out. Cars using these tubes are making from 8,000 to 12,000 miles without removing a tire from the wheel. A wonderful feature of this new tube is that it can be produced and sold at about the same price as the ordinary inner tube.

Mr. Coats has turned over all rights on his invention to the Milburn Puncture-Proof Tube Co., Dept. A-4, Milburn Bldg., 330-335 West Forty-Seventh street, Chicago, who want to place these tubes on a few cars here. They will make a very liberal offer to anyone who wishes to try them at the company's risk, until a distributor is appointed for this territory.—(adv.)

The Mozart chorus and junior orchestra of Morris Brown university, directed by Director of Music Carolyn V. Turner, presented a most pleasing program in Big Bethel church on last Tuesday evening, April 25, in a recital with the vocal and violin departments of Morris Brown university. The musical numbers rendered by various students of these departments gave an idea of the kind of work that has been done during the year, also of efforts to do the conservatory work in the regular normal course of music as offered in the departments of voice, violin and piano this year.

Buick Buick

Business Is Better!

The well-known slogan formerly used for psychological effect is now a fact,—Business is Better. The accompanying chart shows curvature of Buick sales the past six months made by Atlanta Branch, Buick Motor Co., through its dealer organization to consumers in the Southeastern territory.

Our records show a gain of 80 per cent first quarter of 1922 over first quarter of 1921 in shipments by Atlanta Branch to dealers.

Buick's gain in sales at retail to consumers through its dealers in Atlanta Branch territory from December through April is 110 per cent.

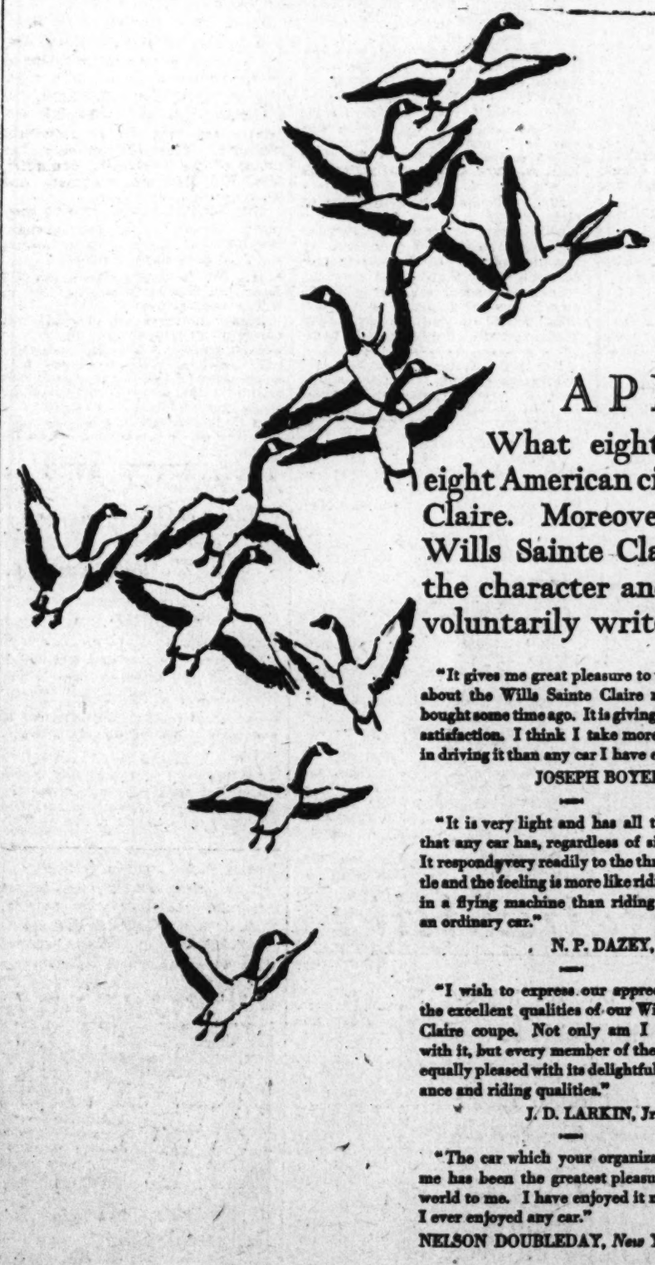

These facts are significant because—Buick has always enjoyed a large sales volume in times of prosperity and a satisfying sales result even in times of depression. The decided upward trend in Buick sales the past several months therefore indicates an improvement in business conditions throughout the States of Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Tennessee and South Carolina, served by the Atlanta Branch.

Therefore, Business is Better.

And we might add—When Better Automobiles Are Built, Buick Will Build Them.

APPROVAL

What eight representative citizens of eight American cities think of the Wills Sainte Claire. Moreover, it is not only what these Wills Sainte Claire owners have to say, but the character and standing of the men who voluntarily write and say it:

"It gives me great pleasure to write you about the Wills Sainte Claire roadster I bought some time ago. It is giving excellent satisfaction. I think I take more pleasure in driving it than any car I have ever had."
JOSEPH BOYER, Detroit

"It is very light and has all the power that any car has, regardless of size. It responds very readily to the throttle and the feeling is more like riding in a flying machine than riding in an ordinary car."
N. P. DAZEY, St. Louis

"I wish to express our appreciation of the excellent qualities of our Wills Sainte Claire coupe. Not only am I delighted with it, but every member of the family is equally pleased with its delightful performance and riding qualities."
J. D. LARKIN, Jr., Buffalo

"The car which your organization sold me has been the greatest pleasure in the world to me. I have enjoyed it more than I ever enjoyed any car."
NELSON DOUBLEDAY, New York City

"The car I have here with me has so completely fulfilled my expectations and seems to possess so many qualities that other cars have lacked, that I have sent you an order for another on which I will put a special body that will cost more than the chassis."
REUBEN MILLER, Pittsburgh

"We have yet to find a hill that the car could not ascend on high gear. We also find that the car has more 'pep' or elasticity than any other car I have ever driven and it is easily handled and highly satisfactory on all road conditions."
W. R. EDWARDS, Chicago

"In the past fourteen years I have owned many of the finest grade cars, and the Wills Sainte Claire surpasses any of the cars I have heretofore driven."
C. H. WORNALL, Kansas City

"I have driven my car about 10,000 miles, and I must say that I have never driven a car that was more flexible or gave me more satisfaction than the Wills Sainte Claire."
F. P. KIMERS, Los Angeles

THE CONSTITUTION'S PARENT-TEACHER PAGE

Edited By Bessie Shaw Stafford

OFFICERS GEORGIA BRANCH, NATIONAL CONGRESS OF MOTHERS AND PARENT-TEACHER ASSOCIATIONS—Mrs. Charles A. Hilbun, president, Macon; Mrs. Charles Goodman, recording secretary, Atlanta; Mrs. Z. V. Peterson, corresponding secretary, Atlanta; Mrs. John Glenn, treasurer, Decatur; Mrs. J. B. Hutton, auditor, Savannah; Mrs. John W. Rowlett, historian, Atlanta; Mrs. Bruce Car Jones, parliamentarian, Macon; Mrs. Lamar Scott, press chairman; Mrs. Arthur C. Watkins, executive secretary, national headquarters, 1201 Sixteenth street, N. W., Washington, D. C.

OFFICERS OF ATLANTA PARENT-TEACHER COUNCIL—President, Mrs. Frank McCormack; vice president, Mrs. R. M. Walker; secretary, Mrs. Chas. E. Robertson; treasurer, Mrs. Z. V. Peterson; corresponding secretary, Mrs. D. S. Wise.

Mrs. Wilhoit Is President Of Grant Park Association

The last meeting of the term of Grant Park P.-T. A. was held Friday, May 5, and was presided over by Mrs. Clarence Heery, the president.

Mrs. J. P. Wilhoit was elected president to succeed Mrs. Heery; Mrs. L. R. Fowler was re-elected secretary, and Mrs. T. H. Eason was re-elected treasurer.

The seventh grade was honor guests, and was served refreshments.

A very favorable report from chairmen of all committees for work that was done throughout the year was given.

Assistant Superintendent R. H. Hunter gave a most interesting talk on the "Go to High School" campaign.

A letter to Cator Woolford thanking him for his kindness and the many opportunities he has placed in and on the school premises, was voted upon.

Retiring Officers Honored.

The retiring officers were presented with baskets of flowers. A vote of appreciation was extended.

A very interesting report was read by Miss Rhodes to the P.-T. A. convention. The report is as follows:

The P.-T. A. of Pryor Street school is touched by the association—198 mothers, 53 fathers and 22 teachers. Every phase of the work of the school is touched by the association—committees on ways and means, membership, program, entertainment, relief, grades, Americanization and better films.

For two years under the direct supervision of the district nurse a "baby health center" has been open on each first Wednesday.

Little Mothers' League.

Possibly no feature of the work is more interesting than the activities of the Little Mothers' league, which came into existence with the baby health center. This organization is made up of girls from the sixth and seventh grades. One mother very generously donates her baby periodically for demonstration purposes. The bath, weight, measure, morning nap, food and clothing are some of the most important subjects studied by the league.

During Better Baby week recently sponsored by the Woman's club these little girls rendered invaluable assistance to the doctors and nurses from 1 to 5 o'clock each day. In the Better Baby poster contest the president of this league won a prize.

The school has been selected by Cator Woolford, philanthropic citizen, as one in which to work out his plan to make the public school a real community center. The yard has been fully equipped with up-to-date play ground apparatus and a recreation teacher has been employed to supervise the activities of the children during the afternoon hours.

A visiting teacher is drawing the school and home closer together by her work in looking after absentees and tardy children. Her visits to the homes have given teachers helpful information regarding home conditions and environment, and have brought about a more sympathetic understanding of the life of the child, without which best results can not be obtained.

Perhaps the most helpful addition to the school is the "dental clinic," opened in January by Mr. Woolford. Of the more than 600 children examined, 516 were found to have defective teeth, 485 had the six-year molar more or less badly decayed. This work is in charge of a skillful dentist. To assist him in the more particular care of the children's teeth a young lady dental hygienist has just been added to the clinics. Toothache has been a great cause of absence from school.

A troup of Girl Scouts have been organized and is meeting with the hearty co-operation of the girls and their parents.

Two enthusiastic Smith-Hughes millinery classes are in operation at present for the mothers and teachers of the school.

Mrs. Winn Elected President Of Georgia Avenue P.-T. A.

The Georgia Avenue P.-T. A. held the last meeting of the year on Wednesday afternoon, Mrs. Dan Toepper presiding.

Mrs. Annie Wise, principal of Commercial High school, was the speaker of the afternoon, and the seventh grade students our special guests. Mrs. Wise, in her usual clear and impressive manner, gave interesting facts and figures on the importance of our boys and girls continuing their studies in one of the high schools, emphasizing the demand for trained workers in all branches of business.

The report of the treasurer, Mrs. J. C. Fuller, showed a nice balance in bank, and it was agreed to use this sum in refurnishing the teachers' rest room. The following committee was appointed to attend to this matter: Miss Marguerite Henderson, chairman; Miss Neely Smith, Mrs. McClure and Mrs. Slate.

Mrs. A. D. Strauss, chairman of the ways and means committee, announced a picture show to be held in the school auditorium in the near future.

A resolution was read by Mrs. Dan Sage and unanimously adopted by the association to stimulate the production and consumption of Georgia products, especially for "Made in Georgia" week.

Mrs. T. E. Robinson, superintendent of the school lunch room, was elected to remain in this position. Our kitchen, under her able management, has an enviable reputation for the lunches served the children.

Especially noteworthy of some of the work accomplished by the ladies of this P.-T. A. was the display of hats made in the four millinery classes under the supervision of Mrs. A. T. Conway.

Mrs. Birdie Moore, chairman of the nominating committee, read her report, and the following officers were elected: Mrs. W. A. Winn, president; Mrs. W. C. Slate, vice president; Mrs. H. M. Long, secretary, and Mrs. E. C. Griggs, treasurer.

The retiring president, Mrs. Dan Goepper, will give a tea for the members of this P.-T. A. to meet the new officers at her home, 440 Washington street, on Wednesday afternoon, May 10.

At the close of the meeting delicious refreshments were served by the social committee, Mrs. L. Moody, chairman.

Milton Avenue P.-T. A. Elects Mrs. Martin.

The P.-T. A., of Milton Avenue school, hold the regular meeting Tuesday, May 3, 1922, at 3:30 o'clock.

It was decided to give a play before the end of school to help pay for the steropticon machine.

The following officers were elected: President, Mrs. C. P. Martin; vice president, Miss Helen Roddey; second vice president, Mrs. Rutland; secretary, Mrs. Annie Milam; treasury, Mrs. McKee; corresponding secretary, Mrs. O. M. Brown.

Walker Street P.-T. A. Holds Meeting.

The mothers of Walker Street P.-T. A. were entertained last Friday evening, and the speakers were Mrs. Rogers Winter, Mr. Russell and Mr. Ashley, who spoke on the proposed charter.

On the afternoon of May 4, a business meeting was held in the school auditorium. Mrs. Neal, one of the teachers, spoke on her trip to Columbus to the state meeting, and Mr. Bressler gave a talk on the importance of commercial training for boys and girls. The last on the program was a plea for true Americanization, given by Mrs. J. E. Andrews. This closes the regular meetings for the term.

Mrs. Dick Presides At Crew Street.

The regular monthly meeting of the Crew Street P.-T. A. was held Wednesday afternoon, the president, Mrs. Carl Dick, presiding. After reading of minutes by the secretary, the reports of different committees were read, among them the report of candy pulling which was the most successful ever given by the school. Mrs. Dick read her report of the convention at Columbus, and the better films chairman told us all about the convention at the Woman's club. Miss Baker, of Girls' High, was the speaker of the afternoon. A donation of $5 was given to the Red Cross. Twelve new members were at this meeting.

Prizes of $1 each were won by Miss Thompson and Miss Jarrel. Election of officers takes place at the next meeting.

Mrs. T. M. Freeman was in charge of the refreshments.

Scout Program Given At Battle Hill

Th Battle Hill P.-T. A. held its regular monthly meeting on Wednesday afternoon, May 3, Mrs. R. L. Thompson, the president, presiding.

One interesting feature of the program at this meeting was given by the troop of Girl Scouts, recently organized in the school.

Presentation of the scout pin, a part of the scout insignia, was made to them in recognition of the fact that they had passed the tenderfoot tests. After this they cleverly gave a few demonstrations of first aid.

Mrs. Roger T. Lively, the attractive leader of the newly organized troop of Girl Scouts, gave a short talk on the history of the scout movement and explained the duties and privileges connected with being a Girl Scout.

After this talks from the high school representatives were given, stressing the importance of getting a high school education. Mrs. L. V. Peterson, vice president of the state P.-T. A., gave a very convincing talk on the material or monetary value a high school education is to a boy or girl.

Miss Granger, a senior student of the Girls' High school, told in an attractive manner of the advantages that the Girls' High school gives for well-rounded development of girls; the social, athletic, dramatic and recreational activities being of great benefit.

Miss Barnes, an instructor of Girls' High, gave a short talk on the cultural value of a high school education and clearly described the different courses offered to students of the Girls' High.

Refreshments were served during the social half hour, which the club enjoyed after adjournment.

The association will be entertained at its regular May meeting at the home of Mrs. F. A. Coursey, in Mosley Park, by Mrs. Coursey and Mrs. F. P. Morris.

Lee Street P.-T. A. Hears Speakers.

The last meeting of the P.-T. A. of Lee Street school was held Thursday afternoon in the school auditorium, which was decorated with spring flowers.

The president, Mrs. D. M. Therrell presided and opened the meeting with prayer, after which Mrs. A. P. Stewart, secretary, and Mrs. J. T. Wilkerson, treasurer, read their reports.

The following speakers gave both pleasing and instructive talks on "Go to High School:" H. R. Hunter, Mrs. Z. V. Peterson, Miss Norma Tucker, of Girls' High; Miss Frances Turner, of Commercial; James H. Therrell, of Tech High, and Benson Freeman and Samuel Prodger, of Boys' High. Mrs. W. P. Lemmon, chairman of better films, asked the mothers if any other day than Saturday would be more convenient during vacation for them to send or take their children to the children's matinee at the Howard theater. It was voted that another day would be more convenient during the summer months. After the meeting punch was served.

The Lee Street baby center will hold their regular clinic Monday, May 8, from 2 to 4 o'clock. The nurses and doctor in charge most earnestly request the mothers to bring their babies within these hours.

Douglas Fairbanks will be seen in "Mr. Fix-It" at Lee Street picture show, May 12, at 7:30 o'clock.

The regular meeting of the Central Grammar P.-T. A., of Decatur, met last Wednesday afternoon, May 3.

After the meeting was called to order by the president, Mrs. E. B Branch, the secretary and treasurer made their reports, they were delightfully entertained by a number from Miss Stone's class.

Mrs. Glenn made an interesting report of the state convention, held at Columbus. It was followed by a profitable and enthusiastic talk by Mr Glausier, the superintendent, on "Co-operation."

As this was the last meeting during this school year they elected new officers as follows: President, Mrs E. B. Branch; vice president, Mrs. J. A. Campbell; treasurer, Mrs. J. C. Schutze; secretary, Mrs. Howard Askew. Only the vice president and treasurer will be new officers.

Blackwell, Mrs. Dudley Glass and Mrs. J. Kell Martin; also Mrs. W. C. Hendrix and Mrs. W. R. Crowe, whose untiring efforts have so aided the association and whose last meeting it was.

Mrs. Scheel called for nominations from the floor for two members to serve with the new officers on the executive board. Mrs. John Thompson and Mrs. L. M. Purdy were nominated and elected.

During the social hour following the meeting Mrs. J. B. Peschau, chairman of the social committee, and her committee served ice cream.

Tech High Will Keep Open House Next Wednesday

Tech High will keep open house Wednesday, May 10, from 11 o'clock to 3 o'clock. The seventh and eighth grades of the grammar schools are especially invited to inspect the exhibits of the seven departments of Tech High. The shops and laboratories will be in action and should be very interesting to the patrons of the school. It is hoped that every one interested in technical training in high schools, will accept this opportunity to see what the boys are accomplishing under many difficulties.

C. E. Broach and his committee are perfecting arrangements for the P.-T. A. to give a banquet to the graduating class May 23. This is expected to be an annual event. Any patron of the school, or member of the association, may attend the banquet provided they secure a ticket from Mr. Broach's committee before May 15. Detail information of this entertainment will be given next week.

Tuesday, May 16, there will be a call meeting of the P.-T. A., time and place to be given later. The object of this meeting is to install officers for the year 1922-23, which will enable the president to appoint committees to be ready to report for duty when school opens in September.

Mrs. Preston Adams Entertains Board.

Monroe, Ga., May 6.—Mrs. Preston Adams was the charming hostess to the executive board of the Monroe P.-T. A. on last Thursday afternoon at her home on North Broad street. The meeting was presided over by the president, Mrs. A. B. Mobley, and different departments of the organization gave splendid reports.

After the business Mrs. Adams served refreshments.

A beautiful party was given last Friday afternoon at the Country club complimentary to the teachers of the Monroe schools.

The assembly room of the Country club was a beautiful garden of wild flowers. Honeysuckle, dogwood and smilax were used in profusion, making the setting very attractive for the entertainment.

Tables were placed about the room forming a circle, and on each table were placed beautiful bowls of wild flowers.

Bridge was the game of the afternoon and after a very spirited game a lovely salad course with candy was served.

The hostesses on this delightful occasion were Mrs. Mell Wayne, Mrs Ernest Camp, Mrs. Arthur Mobley and Mrs. Roy Nunnally.

Fair Street P.-T. A. Holds Meeting.

The meeting of the Fair Street P.-T. club was held Thursday after the executive business, the program which featured the "Go to High School" campaign. Miss Ranger, of the Girls High; Mrs. Fletcher and Mr. Lewis, of Commercial High, gave splendid talks on the subject of "Go to High School." Miss Ora Stamps, of Edgewood school, spoke briefly on school matters in general.

Mrs. Fred Shelpert gave a report of the P.-T. A. convention in Columbus. The news of Miss Mobley's recovery from a recent illness and her early return to her classes, was received with much pleasure. Miss Skinner's grade received the prize banner for the largest attendance of mothers.

The association will hold the final meeting for the year Thursday, May 25, in the school auditorium.

Calhoun P.-T. A. Hears High School Principals

A most interesting meeting was held by the P.-T. A. of Calhoun school on Thursday afternoon. The principals from the four high schools of the city addressed the meeting and each one in their most eloquent and impressive manner brought out the fundamental principles of their particular school. Their talk was most cordially received after which Miss Lillie Wurm, principal of Calhoun, stated that every pupil is going to enter high school this fall, from her two seventh grades:

This being the last meetinf of the school term, officers for next year were elected as follows: Mrs. Howell Dodd, president; Mrs. B. V. Bottom, treasurer; Mrs. J. A. Broach, secretary. Mrs. W. B. Sharp, who has served as secretary continuously for the past six years was given a rising vote of thanks for her faithfulness and loyalty to the association.

An interesting and enthusiastic report was made by Mrs. Porter Langston, chairman of Better Films Committee, as to progress of the work.

Mrs. A. P. Tripod, chairman of school improvement committee, made a report which brought much joy to the association when she stated that council aproved the purchase of property adjoining the present site, and we will have a 315 foot frontage and a depth of 350 feet or a total of two and one-half acres, upon which a twenty-room building will be erected with modern equipment.

The committee of fathers of which Dr. J. A. Broach is chairman, were voted thanks for their splendid work in regard to the new building. Mr. Atho Sower then said that although they had worked untiringly still the greater part of the work was accomplished by Mrs. Tripod.

A count of parents present gave the prize to Miss Lola Farham's room, even-one. There being no other business the meeting adjourned to meet the first Thursday in October, 1922.

Church Street P.-T. A. In East Point.

The P.-T. A., of Church Street school, held the last meeting of the scholastic year Thursday afternoon, Mrs. E. L. Murphy presided over the business session. Final reports from the chairmen of the different committees were turned in, and all old and new business was settled satisfactory. Mrs. W. L. Scott donated a large swing to the playground.

It was moved and carried that the election of officers be carried over until the September meeting as there will be several changes in the school at the beginning of the new year.

Mrs. J. R. Campbell and Miss Mattie Henderson presented eighty-two of the pupils in song, readings and playlets.

Third grade A and First grade B, of which Mrs. Campbell and Miss Henderson are teachers, were awarded a $1 cash prize each, for the largest attendance of mothers.

Third grade A has won the cash prize every month this year, except the month of February.

At the conclusion the social committee served tea and sandwiches.

Sixty-three mothers were present.

Mrs. Therrell Gives Report On Lee Street Association

Mrs. D. M. Therrell, president of Lee Street P.-T. A., makes the following yearly report for her club:

"There is an unlimited amount of work for P.-T. A.'s and there are tremendous possibilities for good along many lines but the workers, both teachers and mothers, must keep in mind the dignity and importance of the work, if they would keep the general morale on a high plane. Co-operation is the keynote. There must be co-operation between mothers and teachers or else there is nothing to justify the existence of P.-T. A.'s.

"The character of the work which has been accomplished by Lee Street association is indicative of the concerted effort of the mothers and teachers of the school. At this time the association stands free of debt and untrammeled. Each Friday night since the beginning of the school year, the association, with its own moving picture machine, has sponsored a good wholesome picture show, suitable for both children and adults.

"The door receipts of these shows, up to date, amounted to $774.64, the cost of putting on the shows was $540.15. This expense includes the cost of feature and educational films, mailing, posters, operator, musician and janitor service for 29 shows. The president holds the receipts in full for both the picture machine and the new piano and the association has a clean slate. Much grateful appreciation is due Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Hadley for the success of our picture shows, also, R. J. Thiesen, of S. A. Lynch enterprises.

"The piano has been paid for from the proceeds of our activities, including a supper, a Halloween party, two candy pullings, a rummage sale, personal subscriptions and $20 from the picture show proceeds. The kitchen has been adequately equipped with china and silver and the piano in the auditorium adjusted and tuned.

"Our activities include contributions to the Atlanta Child's home, Wilson Memorial fund and Lee Street Baby center. The association has borne its full share of responsibility in welfare work. At Christmas tide, not only were many needy families remembered substantially, but throughout the year a response has been given to numerous calls of need and sickness. The sum of $562.54 has been deposited in West End bank since October, 1921, and $553.68 withdrawn. The amount of $151.85 has been earned by ten class chairmen from a bazaar and rummage sales. Owing to the fact that we had no constitution at this time, this amount was not deposited by the treasurer but was expended to the best advantage by the class chairmen and their respective teachers. Two victrolas, one 9x12 rug, one doll house, books, sections of bookcase and pictures were purchased.

"Following is the report of Mrs. W. M. Dickenson, chairman of relief work: Cash received from members of P.-T. A., $36.26; cash disbursed, $26.01; cash on hand, $10.45.

"Five children provided with glasses by a specialist; one child operated on, five children furnished one quart of milk daily; garments furnished, 475; shoes, 41 pair; hose, 46 pair; hats and caps, 11."

Daily Wireless Service Of Atlanta Constitution Is to Be Demonstrated Receiving Set to Be Installed in the Auditorium for "Own Your Home" Show.

TO CATCH PROGRAMS PRESENTED FROM WGM

Loud Speaker Will Enable People Around Constitution Booth to Hear Service.

Demonstration of The Constitution radio service will be given thousands of people all through this week, when they visit The Constitution's booth at the "Own Your Home" exposition in the city Auditorium.

In the Auditorium at Booth 53, the booth The Constitution will occupy, everything that is sent out from WGM, the station broadcasting for The Constitution, will be picked up with a radio receiving set and amplified by use of a loud speaker. Thousands of people are expected to receive this radio service during the six days the exposition will be in progress.

A simple inside aerial will be used in receiving the service of The Constitution. The set used will not be a specially built outfit, but will be of standard make and one that is not expensive. It is the aim of The Constitution to show the benefits of its radio service through this demonstration.

Each evening at 6 o'clock and 9 o'clock the set will be tuned to WGM and all of the market and crop reports, the news service and the entertainment features will be given by the loud speaker.

The receiving set to be used will be taken from the stock of the Merriam-Hall Radio Service and be kept at the Auditorium throughout the week.

It is the plan of The Constitution to cut down the amplification on the loud speaker to a degree that it will not interfere with conversation and talks in other booths. The signals from WGM will be amplified sufficiently, however, to be heard by people all around The Constitution's booth.

WGM OPERATOR

A. W. SHROPSHIRE.

Mr. Shropshire is in charge of the radio broadcasting station, WGM, which transmits every night and Sunday afternoon for The Atlanta Constitution.

SONGS BY IRISH TENOR BROADCAST

Air Around WGM Rings With Tones of John McCormack in Irish Ballads.

Last evening between 6 and 6:30 o'clock one of the sweetest tenor voices that America has known went out into the air from WGM, when The Constitution broadcast a concert of seven songs from Victrola records made by the famous Irish tenor, John McCormack.

The concert with these songs was appropriate in view of the recent illness of the noted singer which will make impossible personal appearances or the making of new records by him for some months and possibly years to come.

There is hardly a music-lover, either, who does not appreciate McCormack's voice as one of the best lyric tenor voices in the world. And Irish songs—the old ballads of the Emerald Isle—can not be inetrfreted by any other singer as McCormack interprets them.

A well-balanced program was arrarged by the Victrola department of the Cable Piano company, and besides the Irish ballads, includes others which are known largely by McCormack's interpretation of them.

The concert was opened with "Dear Old Pal of Mine." The other numbers were "That Tumbledown Shack in Athlone," "The Rosary," "The Trumpeter," "Mother Machree," "At Dawning," and "Little Mother o' Minc."

DENTAL ALUMNI TOTAL NEARING 2,500 MARK

With the present graduating class of the Atlanta Southern Dental college, the alumni of that institution will have nearly reached the 2,500 mark, according to Dr. R. R. Byrnes, vice dean and superintendent of the college. These alumni, however, are composed of graduates of both the Atlanta and the Southern Dental colleges, as well as graduates of the Atlanta-Southern, since the two other colleges were combined into one.

Every state in the union, and five countries besides the United States, are represented in the roster of the two colleges before and since their merger into the Atlanta-Southern Dental college. The Atlanta-Southern Dental college now ranks as the fifth largest of its kind in the United States, and next year, according to present indications, will have an enrollment of 500 students with a graduating class of 100. New buildings have had to be erected to take care of the increasing enrollments of recent years.

FAMOUS ARTISTS TO BE BROADCAST

Singers and Musicians From Two Continents to Be Presented by Edison Phonograph.

A concert that is sure to attract the interest of thousands of radio enthusiasts in this part of the country will be given from WGM Monday night when eight numbers by noted American and European artists will be given by use of the Edison phonograph. The program was arraged by the Edison Shop and includes voice, piano, violin, cornet and quartet selections.

In view of the news developments in the domestic life of Mme. Margarete Matzenauer, it will be of interest to hear the diva's interpretation of "Amour! viens aider ma faiblesse," from "Samson and Delilah," by Saint-Saens. She sings the number in French accompanied by an orchestra.

Trio Is Big Number.

Another number of note in the concert will be "Ave Maria," by Schubert, sung by Marie Rappold, soprano, with a violin obligato by Albert Spalding, and piano accompaniment by Robert Gaylor. All of these are artists of note, and this should be one of the best selections of the whole concert.

The concert Monday night is being given through the medium of two inventions, or one invention and the other a discovery, in which the same man has had wide experience. Thomas A. Edison, who perfected the Edison re-creation of music, has also done much experimentation in the wireless field.

In this concert Lucrezia Bori, who has just appeared in Atlanta with the Metropolitan Opera company, will sing a number from "Romeo and Juliet." The reception she was given here promises a warm welcome for this number.

Program for Monday.

The program for Monday night is as follows:

1. "On Wings of Song," Mendelssohn-Achron.
   Violin solo by Vasa Prihoda.
   Pianoforte by Asta Doubravska.
2. "Ave Maria," Schubert.
   Soprano solo by Marie Rappold.
   Violin obligato by Albert Spalding.
   Pianoforte by Robert Gaylor.
3. "The Sunshine of Your Smile," Ray.
   Cornet solo by Louis Katzman.
4. "Coming Home," Willeby.
   Soprano solo by Anna Case.
5. "Amour! viens aider ma faiblesse," Saint-Saens.
   Soprano solo by Margarete Matzenauer.
6. "Bygone Days," Friml.
   Violin solo by Marta de la Torre.
7. "Valse," from "Romeo and Juliet," Gounod.
   Soprano solo by Lucrezia Bori.
8. "Memories of the South."
   Piano solo by Ernest L. Stevens.

LISTENING IN

E. C. Buchignani, director of the Radio show, which is to open in New York on May 22d, was busily engaged at his office in the Hotel McAlpin, making arrangements for the show, when he was suddenly accosted by a well-dressed young fellow who had evidently imbibed quite a bit more than his share of (deleted by Volstead).

"Are you—hic—the fello wthat's—hic—running the Radio show?"

"Why, yes," Buchignani answered.

"What can I do for you?"

"Hic—I wanna use your—hic—broadcasting station—hic—at the show."

Out of curiosity, Buchignani asked: "What would you use it for?"

"There's nothing—hic—in this house-top stuff," the visitor answered, "I wanna—hic—tell the world I love my Mabel."

Buchignani says that after he rests up from putting over this show, he will attempt to obtain a broadcasting station to help the young man carry out his heart's desire.

The first large radio show to be held in the middle west is staged for the end of June. The show will be held in the auditorium in Milwaukee and will be a combination radio and electrical show exhibition. Spearman Lewis, Hotel Blankington, Milwaukee, Wis., is the managing director.

Reports continue to come in of blown-out fuses as the result of attempting to duplicate General Squier's feat of plugging in a radio receiver on the electric light circuit. The trouble is that the lets are not made to take such voltage. General Squier knew what he was doing when he made the test, and prapered for it. Those who emulate him are working under different conditions, and are likely to encounter unpleasant results. The experiment is not recommended in the ordinary home and with the ordinary set.

Predictions that the sale of parts would fall off as the public took up radio and only complete sets desired, does not seem to be borne out by the reports of dealers. Apparently the broadcasting craze caused several regiments of the experimentally inclined to join the amateur army.

To Play for WGM Tuesday Night

Shown above are the members of the Brena u Busters who will be among the college girls appearing at 6 o'clock Tuesday evening from WGM. They are Nina Bizelle, pianist; Doris Deer and Sarah Gray, violinists; Margaret Gratton, violoncellist; Catherine Reese, banjoist, and Ruth Owings, who manipulates the drums, xylophones and other traps.

ENFORCING OF LAW URGED BY HOBSON

Former Congressman Gives Address From WGM, Offering Solution of Liquor Problem in U.S.

"Salvaging Civilization" was the subject of a strong talk last night at 9 o'clock from WGM, by Captain Richmond Pearson Hobson, former member of congress and one of the most romantic figures of the Spanish-American war. Captain Hobson speaks today in Atlanta at two churches.

At the present time Captain Hobson is talking in the interests of enforcement of the Eighteenth amendment. His talk Saturday for The Constitution's radio service was along that line.

He emphasized that the people must save the Constitution of the United States against the red forces which already have played havoc in half a dozen European countries. Another force which the people of the United States must combat, he declared, is a nation-wide liquor traffic, which, he said, is now assaulting the constitution because congress saw fit to add the Eighteenth amendment prohibiting the manufacture for beverage purposes of intoxicating liquor.

Aim Is Defiance.

There are at the present time 34 organizations in the United States, Captain Hobson asserted, that are combatting enforcement of the anti-liquor law and one, he declared, has boasted that it would break the eighteenth amendment and force its repeal.

Speaking of the menace of the reds, Captain Hobson said that the government now has the names of 2,000,000 reds who have 30,000 odd agents working in the United States. He quoted a sentence from some of the literature he said is being circulated by these agents. It read, "When we finally give the signal drop your shovel, seize a gun and become rich before sundown."

To produce salvage of civilization, the people must get at the source of the attack on civilization and remove it. Liquor, he said, degenerates the minds of men and makes them like beasts. "The use of this poisonous drug," he declared "has made millions and millions of men anti-social toward their fellowmen and has made nations anti-social toward other nations." He blamed the world war on this degeneracy of minds of men through use of liquor. Liquor, he said, has produced war, anarchy and revolution.

Plan for Solution.

Captain Hobson's plan for solution of the liquor problem is an educational campaign, teaching people the bad effects of liquor and inspiring them to avoid these results by avoiding the use of liquor. He proposes that this educational campaign be of such proportions that the coming generations will shun liquor as they would be a quickly acting poison.

Captain Hobson preaches today at All Saints' Episcopal church at 11 o'clock and at St. Paul's Methodist church at 7:45 o'clock.

CHARRED KEGS MUCH IN DEMAND, SAYS SMITH

One of the busy manufacturing plants in the city just now is the H. Smith Cooperage company at 246-250 Decatur street. This concern is one of the oldest—if not the oldest—cooperage plants in the city. It not only manufactures all manner and all sizes of barrels and kegs, but it also handles second-hand barrels and kegs, thus affording a ready market for those who have these on hand. The concern overhauls these second-hand barrels and kegs, and offers them to the trade at an advantageous figure.

Just at this time the company is featuring charred kegs, which Mr. Smith says are in great demand. His company makes them in all sizes, from one-gallon kegs up to as large as desired. Those interested can reach the company through phone Ivy 0626.

A shopkeeper in Orient, L. I., has advertised his place by placing buffalo nickels in the concrete sidewalk in front. The Indian, head is up and each face in the same direction. The coins are placed close together and spell out "Wigwam," the name of his place of business.

Radio to Have Place in Book About Atlanta

Author of History of City Will Tell of Wireless Development Here.

The rapid development of wireless telephone in Atlanta during the last three months will have a prominent place in one of the chapters of the "Book of Atlanta," which is being written by John R. Hornady, writer and formerly associate editor of The Birmingham News. Mr. Hornady has already written the "Book of Birmingham."

Not only will pioneers in the radio field in Atlanta be mentioned, but the development of wireless, showing how broadcasting agencies here have made a matter of valuable service to radio enthusiasts will be gone into extensively.

The "Book of Atlanta" will not be what is commonly called a "mug" book, in which the professional "prominent citizen" pays a fee to have his history and picture appear, but will be the romance of a city which took on a new life after the civil war and which since has become the metropolis of the south.

It will be a distinction for Atlanta to be shown in this "Book of Atlanta" as one of the centers of intensive development of wireless telephony as a commercial asset.

BUSINESS QUICK TO GRASP MERITS OF BROADCASTING

American business has, with its characteristic promptness, been quick to seize upon the advantages offered by radio broadcasting. Throughout the country department stores are planning to erect stations, if possible, to aid them in the problems of advertising and selling. Five hundred representatives of the National Dry Goods association considered that problem in New York two weeks ago.

However, quite apart from the retailer's point of view, which must inevitably be influenced largely by considerations of publicity quite as much as of business, certain trade organizations are using or planning to use the radio to disseminate information in the same manner as the Chicago Board of Trade is now sending out crop reports to the farmers.

As a consequenc, there is now going out regularly a broadcast among members of the silk trade, giving quotations and other up-to-the minute market information. Several other lines are using this method with more or less regularity. And the department of commerce is assisting by broadcasting cabled information from abroad to those interested, as for instance, a report of automobile conditions from South America to automobile manufacturers in the United States.

No device ever invented for keeping business information up to the minute compares with radio, apparently.

MRS. POOL'S PARTY ENTERTAINS BOYS

Members of the Y. M. C. A. Boys' club were delightfully entertained by Mrs. Norman Pool and her Sunday school class Thursday evening. Music, short stories and songs were rendered, and games were led by the young ladies of the party. Club youngsters put on several stunts that were original with the club.

At least once a week members of the Y. M. C. A. are entertained by a group of talented young people who volunteer their services. Mrs. Pool's party consisted of Miss Augusta Baker, Miss Florine Sparks, Miss Elizabeth Irwin, Miss Louise Martin, Miss Allie Woodall, Miss Sylvia Northcutt and Kenneth Benford. Mrs. F. E. Kibler will furnish entertainment next Friday night.

Darwin's "Origin of Species" was translated into every European language.

Truant officers of the Chicago public schools have discovered that movies shown in the classrooms in connection with the lessons insure full attendance. The films are used in history, geography, health and nature study classes.

BRENAU GLEE CLUB ON WGM PROGRAM

Constitution to Have Lengthy Program by College Girls Who Are Presenting Show.

Of course you can't see the Brenau beauties or any one else by a radiophone, but when any one can sing and play like these same Brenau beauties who will give their show Tuesday night in the auditorium of the Atlanta Woman's club, you can almost see them and know they're pretty when you hear them by radiophone.

Radio fans all over the south will have their opportunity to hear the Brenau college Glee club girls between 6 and 7 o'clock Tuesday evening, when The Constitution broadcasts a program by some of the groups that are taking part in the show Tuesday evening.

While the entire chorus will not take part in the Brenau girls' radio program, there are some groups that are sure to score big successes with the juvenile audience that nightly tunes to WGM.

Busters Sure of Hit.

One of the groups in the glee club that is going to make a big hit is the Brenau Busters, the club's jazz orchestra. What the Busters play is real unadulterated jazz, and the girls who are in the Busters know how to handle their instruments.

Members of the Busters are: Nina Bizelle, pianist; Doris Deer and Sarah Gray, violinists; Margaret Gratten, violincellist; Catherine Reese, banjoist, and Ruth Owings, drums, xylophone and other traps.

And with the Busters is one girl who has a reputation for being about the best jazz singer that a college ever caught. She is Joe Woolard, whose big hits have been "Daddy," "Cleopatra," and other similar songs.

But the girls are far from limited to jazz. Some of their best numbers are from operas, and "Four Little Maids From School," from the Gilbert and Sullivan opera, "The Mikado," is one of their best.

Most Popular Girl Sings.

Margaret McCarroll is one of the girls who have solo parts in the Brenau show. She was recently voted the most popular girl at the college, and that's going, too, for there are plenty of mighty popular girls in the Gainesville college.

The girls who sing "Four Little Maids From School," the Gilbert and Sullivan light opera number, are Eleanor Greenleaf, Lucile Westerfield, Rena Boltin and Sarah McInis.

This will be one of the features which will be received by radio in the Auditorium, where The Constitution will demonstrate the worth of its crop and market report and news service and the pleasure to be gained from its entertainment features.

To Mail Announcement Of Shrine Ceremonial In the Near Future

Official announcement of Yaarab Temple's ceremonial session to be held on Wednesday, May 24, is now in the hands of the printers, and will be mailed out to the nobility with list of candidates upon the date of closing the list for this ceremonial.

Applications must be in the possession of Recorder George E. Argard, 190 Peachtree street, Atlanta, on Monday, May 15, accompanied by the full fee of $112.

The ceremonial, which precedes the pilgrimage to Frisco a little more than a week, will be the last that will be held by Yaarab Temple until the fall months, and already a long list of applications is on file to be voted on at the business session to be held at Shrine headquarters, 190 Peachtree street, on Monday, May 22, at 5 p. m.

Yaarab's pilgrimage to the imperial council meeting, which starts June 3, under the leadership of Illustrious Potentate W. Bayne Gibson, comprises a trip of upward of 7,000 miles, through the southern states to Los Angeles, then up the coast to Vancouver, through the Canadian Rockies and plains of Winnipeg, thence south through the Twin Cities, Chicago and Cincinnati. The special rate secured for nobles and their families has resulted in reservations that indicate that the caravan will be the largest that ever trekked out of the oasis of Atlanta to the mecca of the Shrine.

Sheldon Resumes Organ Recital This Afternoon For Constitution Radio

Program Especially Adapted to Broadcasting Arranged by City Organist—Nine Numbers.

VISIBLE AUDIENCE WILL NOT ATTEND

Changes Being Made in the Auditorium Prevent Presence of Atlanta People at Recital.

After being silent for two weeks to the thousands of people who tune in on WGM each evening and every Sunday afternoon, the pipes of the great Atlanta city organ will again give forth their sweetest and most powerful tones at 3:30 o'clock this afternoon when City Organist Charles A. Sheldon, Jr., resumes his Sunday afternoon organ recitals. Due to changes being made at the Auditorium no audiences will be present, but Mr. Sheldon will have a large, enthusiastic invisible audience for his hour's program.

Mr. Sheldon has arranged a program that is particularly suited to broadcasting since he will have no visible audience. In most of his numbers the sweeter single tone combinations will be dominant, and in only a few will he open the stops which make the bass pipes of the instrument send out their thundering peals.

Several cards have been received by WGM during the last week from distant cities asking when the Sunday afternoon recitals on the city organ would be resumed. There are thousands of music lovers in a score of states who will welcome the resumption of the organ programs.

Improve Apparatus.

Since the last organ recital was given, radio engineers of The Constitution have been preparing new appliances for transmitting the organ recitals. The Constitution was one of the first broadcasting agencies which was successful in sending out organ music. But the success was measured and the technical men have now arranged devices which will permit much more successful broadcasting of the organ's tones than before.

Speaking of the lapse in the organ recitals, Mr. Sheldon said Saturday that he had missed playing for the invisible audience, which he has stirred time after time on Sunday afternoon by The Constitution radio service.

"Of course it's work to go down there and play the organ for an hour without an audience that you know is hearing and appreciating the music. But a few days after a radio organ recital, when you get the cards and letters from people in other states, telling you they did receive the music and received it clearly, it repays you for the work.

Aim Public Service.

"My aim is to give the people as much of the organ recital as possible. It's a matter of public service, and when I can go to the Auditorium and run over some numbers, even if I don't have an audience right there I feel sure that I am giving other people something."

Mr. Sheldon's program for this afternoon will be as follows:

1. "Temple March" .... Vincent
2. "To a Water Lily" ..... MacDowell
3. "An Evening Idyl"...Sellars
4. "Salut D'Amour".....Elgar
5. "Ave Maria" ..... Shelley
6. "The Lost Chord" .. Sullivan
7. "Nocturne, op. 9, No. 2" ... Chopin
8. "The Golden Wedding" .... Gabriel-Marie
9. Improvisation.

GRIP OF RADIO IS NATION-WIDE

Peoria, Ill., to Have Prominent Place in History of Wireless as One of Starting Points.

That the grip which radio has obtained is quite countrywide is evident from the enthusiasm which it commands in widely separated sections of the country.

Thus, when the history of radio is written by one of the energetic spirits that are already hunting down origins in this comparatively new branch of science, Peoria, Ill., it would seem, should come in for honorable mention. Comes a report that as early as 1915, when as one genial commentator has said, "Wireless telephony was to the great majority, what differential calculus is to the blanket Indian," Peoria had transmitting and receiving sets. We have no means of proving this statement, although the source would seem reliable, but we have direct evidence, so it would seem, that on March 8, 1920, H. A. Mackley, of Peoria, set an American record for amateur transmitting by reaching the Canal Zone from Peoria. It does not surprise us, moreover, to be told that Mr. Mackley numbers among his "etherial acquaintances" many other pioneers of the air who made places for themselves as early in radio history as Mr. Mackley himself.

It is significant also that the first radio corps to be dispatched to the world war consisted of 75 men who had been recruited in Peoria.

As far as the relative enthusiasm manifested in the different states goes California, according to a bulletin issued by the National Geographic society, leads in the completeness with which it has succumed to the radio infection. Ohio comes second, and New York a close third. Of the 167 licenses issued for broadcasting music and entertainment features up to the middle of April, specifically for broadcasting entertainment and special features, on 360 meters, 37, or more than one-fifth of the total number, were for California companies. Fourteen licenses went to Ohio, twelve to Pennsylvania, and eleven to New York.

The mountains between Jerusalem and Jericho are extremely barren.

AUTOMOBILES—For Sale | AUTOMOBILES—For Sale

LOANS. SALES. STORAGE AUTOMOBILES

STORAGE

We store cars for Factories, Dealers, Banks or Individuals. We are responsible for the safe keeping of your car; no parts, equipment or accessories misplaced. (Our bond with the State protects you.)

SALES

We sell automobiles for our customers, either for cash or on terms. If you want cash, we will handle the notes.

OWNERS

We can always sell a good car. If you want to sell, see us. We will handle the details in the same manner as your Real Estate Agent would handle the sale of property.

BUYERS

We have the largest assortment of cars south of New York; we have cars of all makes and types. We can arrange terms to satisfy responsible buyers.

The cars we offer for sale are not the proverbial rebuilt and fixed-to-sell kind, we sell them to you just as the owner brings them in—in fact you are buying from the owner.

TRUCKS

We have a number of new and used trucks from Ford light deliveries to Packard five tons at attractive prices.

LOANS

We can arrange to advance money to Factories, Dealers or individuals on cars deposited in our Warehouse either in storage or sales department.

GENERAL

If you desire information relative to automobiles, we can give you expert and reliable service.

If you desire market value of automobiles, we can make this appraisement for you.

If you sell your car and want blank bill of sale or conditional sales contract and notes, we will be pleased to furnish these to you, free of charge.

You are cordially invited to inspect our assortment of cars.

If you are in the market for a car, it is a good place to get a line on prices.

HOMES BUILT AT COST

Special "Exposition Week"
Offer to Purchasers of Lots in

DRUID HILLS HEIGHTS

To a limited number who buy lots in Druid Hills Heights at our booth in the Own-Your-Home Exposition at the Auditorium this week, we will build their home at actual cost, according to their own plans and specifications. One house to a person and no home to cost less than $5,000, nor more than $10,000. To responsible parties we will arrange the finances on convenient terms.

This offer is not made to speculators who want to make $3,000 to $5,000 on each house on a nominal investment, but to those who want the home of their dreams, built according to their ideas and who expect to occupy it.

We have a competent builder who will be at your services to do things as you wish or you can have your own architect and builder.

Come down to the Exposition this week, select your plans, your electric fixtures, your hardware, your plumbing, your brick, your paint, your furnace and everything else you want in that home. Pick out one of our 50, 75, 80 or 100 feet lots, then turn us loose and we will make your dream come true.

See our display ad in today's paper, cut out the plat, go out and make several selections (some have been sold), come to our booth, No. 88, at the Exposition and we will try to get together on terms.

90 PER CENT OF THE HUMAN RACE ARE BLIND.
WHY?

BECAUSE they can't see how anything will look when it is finished. The foundations of all fortunes in the United States were made in real estate.

A HOUSE and lot was offered for $16,000.00; no buyer at that price. $3,500 added to beautify the lot with grass and trees, the place sold for $30,000.00 cash to the same man that had refused to give $16,000.00 six months before.

DO NOT BE BLIND. Look at Brookhaven Heights today and see what it will be 5 years from today.

WE ARE SELLING LOTS for $475.00; $20.00 cash, balance $12.50 per month. We have already sold over 300 satisfied purchasers. Only 39 lots left.

ANNOUNCING

BROOKWOOD HILLS

The new residential development located on and east of Peachtree Road at Brookwood. The entire tract lies between the three and four-mile limit, and is bounded south by Ansley Park, east by the Ansley Park Golf Links, and is approached by Peachtree, West Peachtree, Spring Street or Piedmont Avenue.

The subdivision consists of more than five hundred acres, practically all of which is original woodland, and when completely developed as contemplated by the owners, will constitute one of the most desirable residential sections of Atlanta. Many of the most attractive homes in the exclusive Brookwood section are located within a stone's throw of the boundary of this property.

The original unit of this subdivision, consisting of approximately one hundred acres, is now in process of development, under the direction of O. F. Kauffman. All improvements will be included, and the work on this unit pushed to completion at an early date.

This property is unexcelled for location, and will be sold under adequate restrictions. Sales already consummated indicate a brisk demand. If interested, you will profit by an early selection of a lot.

YOU WILL NEVER GET ANYWHERE BY HESITATING

FOR a great many years you have been urged through advertising columns of local newspapers to invest your surplus earnings in ATLANTA REAL ESTATE.

During which time a great deal of pleasure and satisfaction has been derived from the fact that those who acted upon these recommendations now enjoy enhancements in value anywhere from a reasonable expectation to several hundred per cent.

But we must remember that the development of ATLANTA into a great METROPOLIS is just beginning to approach a realization and that the time is rapidly drawing near when the prices of all choice close-in residences will go skyward.

The time to take advantage of this situation is NOW. You will never get anywhere by hesitating. There was never a more favorable time for acquiring the home of your dreams than at the present time.

You are cordially invited to visit our booth at the Exposition or call at our office.

Decatur P.-T. A. Stages Mock Wedding and Trial

The P.-T. A. of Decatur staged a mock wedding a year ago, and on Tuesday evening May 9, the divorce trial of the couple will be featured. The following extract is from the Decatur Daily Error:

"Only one short year ago Miss Vain Gibson and Mr. Little Biggers were united in the unholy bonds of wedlock. The town turned out in force to wish them luck on this fatal step. And now at the end of only twelve months we find them flying into court to get rid of each other.

Mrs. Vain Gibson Little Bibbers has entered suit for divorce from her husband and, Oh, boy! The case she makes out against Mr. Little Biggers is impossible, but with such able legal talent as Mr. Sparling she says she can prove it.

The Error reporter has interviewed all concerned and the following is their account:

"Mrs. Vain Gibson Little Biggers was found at her parents' home on Stickymud street. She was dressed simply and looked just as simple. The strain had told on her, for she seemed to have grown about two feet. When asked about the rumor to the effect that she was going to sue for a divorce, she said: 'Ain't nothin' else —and why not? That little herring has been so mean to me that I never go without my rolling pin.' That he had tried every way in the world to get rid of her and that even while on their honeymoon to Stone Mountain he had persuaded her to jump off the steep side of the mountain, telling her how much fun it was and that it wouldn't hurt. The result was that she had sustained such injury to her funnybone that she couldn't look at a large rock without going into hysterics. That she had an awful expense at the drug store for chewing gum to quiet her. This, she says, is just a sample, and believe her, she is going to give the jury an ear full.

"Mr. Little Biggers, the husband when interviewed at the Colonial tea room, got so excited that he began to ring up the cash register so fast that it got a hot box.

"He said that he knew he was in for trouble only two days after the wedding, when he found Mrs. Vain Gibson Little Biggers in the back yard practicing throwing at a pillow with a flat iron and a rolling pin. And that a few nights after when he lost her 65 cents in a crap game and didn't get in until about 12 o'clock, she hit him so hard on the head with the rolling pin and biscuit cutter that it knocked him so crazy that he thought he was a doughnut, and went around for three days with his mouth wide open. Another time when struck with a flat iron he thought he was a flannel shirt, and hung out on the line in the rain so long that he shrunk up to half the size of the bride, and since then he had been entirely at her mercy.

"Rev. J. A. Campbell, S. O. S., P. D. Q., R. S. V. P., who performed the ceremony, said he expected it. But as the bride threatened him, he was afraid not to go on, although he knew the groom didn't have a cent to give him. He only hopes the groom does not enter suit for damages against him.

"Sheriff E. B. Sutton has issued a subpoena for the entire wedding party, which is as follows:

"Rev. J. A. Campbell, S. O. S., P. D. Q., R. S. V. P.; Miss Hugh Trotti, maid of honor; Mrs. Pitman Sutton, matron of honor; Miss William Alden, ring bearer; Miss W. N. Brownlee, flower girl; Miss Pauline Smith and Miss Saunders Rowland.

"Judge A. S. Turner has called the following jury and has assured them protection:

"Mrs. D. C. Lawhon, Mrs. Barnes, Miss Miller, Mrs. Bayne Gibson, Mrs. Pitman Sutton, Mrs. T. N. Fulton, Mrs. Sparling, Mrs. Baxter, Mrs. Young, Mrs. S. R. Christie, Mrs. Wiley West, Mrs. Floyd Hammond, Mrs. W. P. King, Mrs. Leon O'Neal, Mrs. T. C. Jackson, Mrs. Wiley Ansley, Mrs. Mark White, Mrs. John Pearce, Mrs. J. A. Montgomery, Mrs. A. J. Woodruff, Mrs. Christian, Mrs. J. A. Campbell and Mr. George Everitt."

The Lion of Lucerne.

(From The Indianapolis News.)

There are many interesting historical sights in Lucerne, but one of the most interesting is the famous lion of Lucerne, carved out of the side of a grotto from a model by Thorwaldsen, to commemorate the defense of the Tuileries in Paris, August 10, 1792, by the Swiss guards, who were massacred by the mob.

GREAT EXPOSITION FAVORED IN SAVANNAH

McLendon Would Stage Monster Maritime Event in Port City.

Advocating an international exposition to be held in Savannah in 1925 which would attract representatives from all nations of the world, Secretary of State S. G. McLendon Saturday in a letter addressed to Murray Stewart, mayor Savannah, pledged his co-operation in boosting that city for the exposition and declared that he was certain that little trouble would be encountered in enlisting the aid of the entire south in the matter.

Mr. McLendon suggests that the exposition be held in Savannah to commemorate the inauguration of ocean steamship navigation, for it was from this port in the year 1819 that "The City of Savannah," the first ocean steamship, sailed across the Atlantic to Liverpool. Mr. McLendon's letter, in part, is as follows:

Savannah was the home port of the first ocean-going steamship in the world, and Savannah turned a new page in the history of human progress. This was in 1819. The second steamship to cross the ocean sailed from Canada in 1831 and was the Royal William. This Canadian ship had the distinction of being the first to cross wisely equipped by Colonel Scarborough with both sail and steam facilities, but was the first, in order of time, to demonstrate the practicability of ocean steam navigation.

I believe we can hold at Savannah an exposition of this kind that would bring Savannah and the whole coast of Georgia before the eyes of the world. I believe such an exposition could be held largely on water, and, I believe if the steamship Savannah should be reproduced, and along by its side in Chatham county waters should be placed the largest ship in existence, which, I believe, is the Bismarck, 56,000 gross tons register. This would bring out the history of all the progress of the world in ocean navigation achieved in one hundred years.

I am enthusiastic on this subject. I believe great good would come, not only especially to Georgia, but to the whole south. I believe all maritime nations should be invited to send the best specimens of their merchant ships, and send abroad of hem exhibits of their goods, wares and merchandise, and, after spending a time at Savannah, then these ships should make a friendly trip of the world. I believe the Savannah exposition would expand into a movement of world-wide importance.

I am quite confident that Senators Watson and Harris, and all of our Georgia representatives would give enthusiastic support to such a proposition, and I believe its success would be assured from the day of its birth. Every port in Georgia would derive great benefit from such an exposition, and, I am sure all Georgia would back Savannah in this effort. You need no assurances that I will render every aid in my power.

NEW REALTY COMPANY ORGANIZED IN CITY

Announcement is made today of the organization of the Grant-Jeter Realty company, with B. M. Grant as president and Fred P. Jeter as vice president.

The new firm is now open for business in temporary quarters at 229-231-233 Grant building. It has rented permanent offices on the ground floor of the same building, with entrances both from the lobby of the building and from Forsyth street, and expect to occupy them within the next two weeks.

B. M. Grant, who will be an active member of the firm, is one of Atlanta's pioneer real estate men. Nearly twenty years ago he organized the old B. M. Grant company. Since selling his interest in that company four years ago, Mr. Grant has devoted his time to his outside interests. He is president of the Merchants and Mechanics' bank, and actively interested in a number of other Atlanta industries, besides being a large holder of local real estate.

Fred Jeter is one of the best known of the younger business men of the city. He recently resigned an executive position with the S. B. Turman company in order to be free to engage in business on his own account. While his real estate experience has not been so extensive as that of Mr. Grant, it has been distinctly successful, and his knowledge of apartment house rentals should make him decidedly valuable to the new firm, according to his friends.

The Grant-Jeter Realty company will specialize on down-town leases, apartment house rentals and sales. It will have a large staff of carefully selected salesmen.

VICTOR RECORDS FOR MAY CONTAIN BIG NUMBERS

With eternal freshness of variety the new Victor Records for May are out, embracing interesting new versions and combinations of the world's best music by world-leading artists.

There is no season for love songs, but there are three fine love songs on the May Victor list that well befit the Maytime. The unexpected can always be expected of Mme. Alda, and this time it is "Carissima," a light waltz song in quick, sprightly tempo, sung in English, but with inclinations toward a Spanish style.

Gigli's Victor Record for May is "Notturno d'Amor" (Love's Nocturne), an arrangement to Italian words of the forever-beautiful "Drigo's Serenade."

"The Road That Brought You to Me" is John McCormack's selection for May—a love song, for McCormack, like most of us, loves a good love-song.

Rachmaninoff Plays Prelude.

At last this great artist has yielded to an insistent public demand that he make a Victor Record of this the best known of his many shorter compositions.

A charming Victor Record from an equally delightful opera is Lucrezia Bori's "Oh Gioia la nube leggera" (What Joy to Watch), from "The Secret of Suzanne."

Chaliapin gets into his Victor Records much of that dramatic personality which characterizes his interpretation of operatic roles. For May he makes a superb Victor Record of that homily on gossip—"La Calunnia" (Slander's Whisper) from "The Barber of Seville."

For his first Victor Record Tito Schipa has chosen a song in Spanish popular style from an opera not known in this country—"Granadinas" (Farewell, My Granada). It offers a splendid medium to introduce this remarkable young Italian tenor.

The latest Victor Dance releases specialize on several of the country's most popular dance orchestras, the Benson Orchestra of Chicago playing three complete records of its own, while Paul Whiteman and his orchestra present five separate fox trots.

You can be forgiven if dances like "My Mammy Knows" and "Angel Child" set you strutting off, because they contain elements new even to the Benson scorings. They'll do fine for the Scandal Walk—a step reminiscent of the dancing master in "Madame Sans-Gene."

Two more varieties of fox trot that will find enthusiastic devotees are "Ten Little Fingers and Ten Little Toes," and "In Bluebird Land," by the Bensons.

The Scandal Walk (there's nothing scandalous about it) calls for a new kind of music. "Jimmy (I Love You)" played by the Whiteman's on a new Victor Record for May, has the daintiness of quality demanded by it, opening with the "sea-motive" from "Scheherazade." "After the Rain" on the reverse is brilliant, metallic, with lovely, soft, contrasting passages.

"While Miami Dreams," by Joseph C. Smith and his orchestra, and "Tell Her at Twilight," by Hackel-Berge orchestra, compose a fine Victor dance record.

The "Old-Fashioned Girl" is so only in name on a new Victor fox trot record by Paul Whiteman and his orchestra. On the reserve Club Royal orchestra plays "Little Gray Sweetheart of Mine."

Harrold in Sacred Number.

"The Living God" is an impressive composition.

The May Victor Records include another lovely devotional record by Olive Kline and Elsie Baker in duet. On the one side is "Come, Thou Fount of Every Blessing;" on the other, "Saviour Like a Shepherd Lead Us."

Sir Harry Lauder.

"The Waggle o' the Kilt" and "Bella McGraw."

A charming record is Olive Kline's contribution to the May Victor list. "Longing, Dear, for You" is one of the gentlest and loveliest popular songs of recent recording. "Rockin' in De Win'" on the reverse side is a charming pickaninny lullaby.

Fritz Kreisler has a busy month on May's Victor Record program, appearing in no less than three capacities; arranger, accompanist and as soloist on a record of his own. This is a dignified yet graceful waltz of Johannes Brahms.

For May under the direction of Leopold Stokowski, the Philadelphia orchestra makes a powerful Victor Record of Wotan's Farewell and the Magic Fire Music from "Die Walkure."

There is something charmingly feminine about Erika Morini's playing of a frolicsome, almost giddy little number, "Canzonetta," on a May Victor Record. As it nears its climax, the record becomes especially piquant, stepping its way beyond hearing with exquisite grace.

You can arrange a program from the new May list that any Victor dealer will play for you.

Famed Gun Fighter Is Beaten to Draw By Chief of Police

Wichita Falls, Texas, May 6.—(By the Associated Press.)—J. W. McCormick, chief of police here less than a month, today was the cynosure of all eyes, for yesterday he matched speed on the draw with D. M. "Bud" Ballew, one of the few remaining typical old-time peace officers of the southwest, a man with at least eight notches on his gun and known for his adroit handling of a six-shooter, and Ballew died with his boots on, just as he repeatedly had predicted he would. Ballew's old-style, single action .45 was only half drawn from its holster when his body fell with five steel jacketed bullets fired from a newer model arm by a man trained for years in the Texas rangers.

Ballew, until a few weeks ago a deputy sheriff of Carter county, Okla., gun-fighter extraordinary, and in private life a wealthy stockman, came to Wichita Falls to act as judge in the annual southwestern round up.

For a score of years or more, Oklahoma and Texas had known him in his peaceable moments as a daring, fearless guardian of the law, vanquisher in man-to-man pistol duels of more than a half a dozen truly western bad men. In his cups, Ballew reverted to the type extant in the per-war statehood days, when "the territory" harbored only a comparatively few well-meaning citizens, and many who found the laxer laws there more in keeping with their temperament. Drinking, Ballew was seized with an uncontrollable desire to flourish his shooting irons, shout Indian war whoops and sent volley after volley of shots splitting into the air as fast as he could work his thumbs on the hammers.

Fear Otubreak.

Chief McCormick yesterday feared such an outbreak, he said. Within the past fortnight Ballew on two occasions had shot up small Oklahoma towns in broad daylight.

Word came to the chief that Ballew was drinking and might start trouble. The officer went to a soft drink parlor, observed Ballew and, tapping him on the shoulder, charged him with drunkenness and demanded he hand over his pistol.

Ballew turned half about with the remark: "Hell, you're out o' luck."

The chief said the Oklahoman reached for a pistol and, beating him to the draw, the chief fired from the hip. Five bullets hit Ballew, two from behind, one of them penetrating the brain. He died instantly. Ballew was 45 years old.

McCormick's record as an officer is something of a contrast to that of Ballew. He has small reputation as a gunman and this was his first killing. When a member of the Texas ranger force, McCormick was assigned to "clean up" the oil fields during their most lawless days here. He arrested many gamblers and alleged "bad men" and has a reputation for being cool and fearless. He served with the rangers when war threatened betwee Texas and Oklahoma claimants to oil lands on the Red river bed over two years. As a result of his work in this section he was selected as chief of police for Wichita Falls less than a month ago.

Wilson Foundation Income Tax Ruling Upheld by Mellon

Washington, May 6.—Secretary Mellon today informed Senator Glass of Virginia by letter that the treasury upon reconsideration had reached the same conclusion as held by Commissioner Blair that contributions to the Woodrow Wilson Foundatio were not exempt from federal income tax. He added, however, that he would be glad to hold the matter in abeyance and postpone a formal ruling until the Wilson Founation might re-organize to permit exemptions under the law.

Mr. Mellon's letter was made public at the treasury after the secretary had called at the white house. Accompanying the letter was a memorandum outlining the treasury's conclusions on the legal points involved.

Russ Ambassador Denies Improper Use of Credits

Washington, May 6.—Charges made in the senate that Boris Bakhmeteff, the last accredited Russian ambassador here, had illegitimately used money from credits extended by the United States to Russia under the Kerensky regime, were denied by Mr. Bakhmeteff today in a statement filed with the state department and forwarded by Secretary Hughes to the senate.

1922 List of Accredited High Schools Shows Steady Growth for State System

Georgia's high school system took another long forward stride in the school year coming to a close this month, according to the new list of accredited high schools announced Saturday by University of Georgia committee on accrediting. The new list shows 225 accredited four-year high schools, twenty-two more than the last one. Twenty-five schools have been added to the list and only three stricken from it.

Another index of higher standards is found in the fact that eleven schools were raised from group 2 to group 1 and only one school reduced from the higher to the lower group.

Organized in 1903.

In 1903 the university undertook, in a definite way, the building up and accrediting of the high schools of the state. The first list of accredited schools was issued in 1904-05. There were seven four-year public high schools and four four-year private academies, and thirty-nine three-year high schools listed that year. There were graduated from the four-year public schools that year fifty-four boys and forty girls, and from the three-year schools, 161 boys and 277 girls. There were 149 teachers in these fifty schools.

Gradually the number of accredited schools has increased until the university list for 1922 shows over 225 four-year schools, over 30,000 pupils enrolled and over 4,600 graduates this year.

The accredited system has grown in the confidence of the schools and colleges, until now it is accepted by all as a standard for the state.

In 1921, Chancellor Barrow increased the university committee on accrediting to Professors Stewart, Hooper, Fain, from the university, and requested the College association to appoint three members, Jack, Ferrer, Caldwell; and add Professors Cash and Park, officers of the High School association and Professor Pound of the state department of education.

Correspondence relating to accrediting will continue to be addressed to the university chairman and inspector, Joseph S. Stewart, Athens, Ga. As opportunity presents, he will be aided in the inspection by Supervisor E. A. Pound of the state department of education.

According to the new list, the following schools, formerly not accredited, were added to the group of standard high schools: Blythe High school, Brooklet High school, Byromville High school; Carnesville High school, Clayton High school, Cochran Twelfth district, A. & M., Colquit High school, Concord High school, Crawford High school, Cumming High school, Andrew Academy, at Cuthbert, Doerum High school, Douglas High school, East Point High school, Grayson High school, Greenville High school, Harlem High school, Hogansville High school, Jeffersonville High school, Leesburg High school, Leslie High school, Nashville High school, Reidsville High school, Soperton High school and Talbatton High school.

The schools whose rating was raised from group 2 to group 1 were: Blakely High school, Buchanan High school, Lorena Hall, at Columbus, Donalsonville High school, Douglasville High school, Granite Hill Tenth district, A. & M. school, Lavonia High school, Monticello District school, Ocilla High school, Watkinsville High school, Woodbury High school.

30,352 Were Enrolled.

There were 13,820 boys enrolled last year and 16,532 girls. Of last year's graduates 2,042 were boys and 2,500 were girls. This was 4,500 per cent increase over 1904.

It will be noticed on the map that the majority of counties have one central accredited school and this is affiliated with smaller schools of the county in such a way that all may complete the work of the central school. An accredited school costs money and there should not be too great a multiplication of these in a county, but efforts should be made to improve the equipment and teaching force and provide every transportation of high school pupils, leaving the lower grades near home, according to Dr. Joseph S. Stewart, chairman of the accrediting committee.

There are a few counties on the map that do not show an accredited high school. State aid will soon help these to a better standing, Dr. Stewart says.

The state department is urging that every county be granted state aid next year to help provide for the rural boys and girls in the central accredited schools.

Georgia Leads South.

No other southern state, except Texas, has so many graduates from the accredited schools as has Georgia.

"The day is not far distant when in every county there will be an accredited senior high school free and in reach of the youth of the entire county," Stewart declared.

LIST OF ACCREDITED HIGH SCHOOLS 1922.

NOTE:—Schools with star in front of the name indicate that those have won a place on the southren list of accredited schools as well as in group 1 of the Georgia list. Group 1 represents the best schools in teaching staff, equipment of laboratory, library and building. Group 11 represents these schools that have inadequate equipment in laboratory, library and not always have three-fourths of the teachers' college graduates, but offer 15 units.

PLEADS SELF-DEFENSE IN ADMITTING KILLING

Columbus, Ga., May 6.—(Special.) Jerry L. Mullins admitted at the preliminary hearing today in Girard, Ala., that he killed William McSwain, Jr., Friday night of last week and pleaded self-defense. He was held to the Russell county grand jury under a $5,000 bond on a charge of murder, while William McSwain, Sr., father of the dead man, was bound over under a $2,500 bond. Mayor C. M. Knowles presided at the hearing.

The Chinese language is the most ancient spoken language.

Commission Form Of Government Planned for Albany

Albany, Ga., May 6.—(Special.)—Radical changes in the city government of Albany and one affecting Dougherty county in an important way are contemplated in bills which Senator Dennis Fleming, representing the tentn district, will introduce at the coming session of the legislature, unless it shall develop that there is a stronger sentiment against the measures than he believes exists.

The most interesting of the measures Senator Fleming will introduce proposes to give Albany a commission form of government. He proposes to abolish the office of mayor and incidentally cut short the term of Mayor H. A. Peacock, who was elected last November to hold the office til 1924. He would also muster out of public life A. E. McLean as councilman at large, whose present term is concurrent with that of the mayor.

It is the senator's plan to have five city commissioners, one from each of the present city wards. These would elect one of their number chairman. The commission would elect a city manager, who would be in complete charge of all city business. It is Senator Fleming's opinion that the change he is preparing to make will save the city approximately $35,000 a year. He has given commission government careful study and says that now he is sure he is right, he is going ahead. He resides in Albany and it is understood that Representative W. H. Beckham will support the local bills in the house.

Another of the bills of which notice is given would separate the city and county boards of education. Under the present system the five members of the county board of education are ex-officio members of the city board. The chairman of the board of county commissioners is another ex-officio member and the other five members are elected by the city council.

The third Albany bill of Senator Fleming will create the office of city recorder and provide for the manner of his election. The details of this measure, as well as many details of the other proposed, have not been made public.

The county bill of the senator affects the board of commissioners of roads and revenues. There are three members of this board and for years they have been elected by the grand jury. Senator Fleming objects to this plan on the ground that comparatively few citizens of the county serve on the grand jury; that many serve repeatedly and other citizens equally qualified are never drawn for grand jury service.

He, therefore, thinks the election of these important officers, who levy all taxes and disburse all county money, should be in the hands of the people. A. J. Lippitt, a prominent business man and former president of the Georgia Association of County Commissioners, is chairman of the Dougherty county board. The other members are N. F. Tift and H. W. Johnson

Dry Agents Claim 3 Confessions In Shooting Case

Confessions have been secured of three or four men under arrest at Rome in connection with the gun battle between officers and alleged moonshiners which occurred Wednesday on the border of Floyd and Gordon counties, according to Nieufield T. Jones, assistant federal prohibition director, who has returned to Atlanta after personally directing a thorough investigation of the shooting.

A. J. Spence, head of the Rome prohibition unit, was wounded in the right side during the battle. J. C. Adams and Socar Stoddard were wounded and arrested.

Adams, Stoddard an J. O. Teal, another prisoner, have confessed to the shooting of the officer, according to Mr. Jones. John Stroud, a fourth man under arrest, has denied all connection with the incident.

The four men are in Floyd county jail in default of $10,000 bond, following preliminary arraignment before Commissioner J. C. Printup. Warrants have been issued for four other men, it is said.

Assistant Director Jones stated his investigation isclosed that Spence and Deputy Marshal Goding were attacked, following a still raid, by seven armed men. They disregarded the command, "Hands up," and the firing began.

One man is believed to have died from wounds, Mr. Jones said. A coffin was sold by an undertaker in Calhoun, and was seen on a wagon going into the mountains, he said, and the coffin is said to be unaccounted for.

"When one of our officers is injured we will get the assailant if it takes our entire force and six months' time," Mr. Jones said Saturday.

Fish Children Hung Up to Dry

Mother, may I go out to swim?
Yes, my darling daughter;
I'll hang you out on a hickory limb
Until you're used to the water.
Mother Fish Ballads.

THIS is what the Two Spotted Acara do to their young, and while this a fish story it is not a fishy one.

The Two Spotted Acara (Acara Bimaculata) is a member of the Cichlyda group, or "mouth breeders." The female lays her eggs against rocks in the waters of her estate, or on a flower pot in the aquarium, then fans the water with her tail to keep up a circulation.

All the circulating work is not done by the Eve of the family, for the male has his turn in fanning his tail and keeping the water busy. The female helps in the incubating of the eggs by keeping them in her mouth after a certain time. After birth Mother Acara takes the little ones to the top of the water and hangs them on the roots of floating plants, by a hair-like appendage on the mouth. If the youngster falls off the root, the mother puts him back again until the hanging period is over.

Both heads of the family lead their offspring around the pool or aquarium, teaching them to swim and fighting off all other fish who might develop cannibalistic tendencies toward the tender young things.

THE CALL OF THE WILD

BY ROBERT W. SERVICE.

(From "The Spell of the Yukon," Copyright for Robert W. Service. Published by special arrangement.)

ILLUSTRATED BY HUBERT MATHIEU

HAVE you gazed on naked grandeur where there's nothing else to gaze on,
Set pieces and drop-curtain scenes galore,
Big mountains heaved to heaven, which the blinding sunsets blazon,
Black canyons where the rapids rip and roar?
Have you swept the visioned valley with the green stream streaking through it,
Searched the vastness for a something you have lost?
Have you strung your soul to silence?
Then for God's sake go and do it;
Hear the challenge, learn the lesson, pay the cost.

Have you wandered in the wilderness, the sage-brush desolation,
The bunch-grass levels where the cattle graze?
Have you whistled bits of rag-time at the end of all creation,
And learned to know the desert's little ways?
Have you camped upon the foothills, have you galloped o'er the ranges,
Have you roamed the arid sun-lands through and through?
Have you chummed up with the mesa?
Do you know its moods and changes?
Then listen to the Wild—it's calling you.

Have you known the Great White Silence, not a snow-gemmed twig aquiver?
(Eternal truths that shame our soothing lies.)
Have you broken trail on snowshoes? mushed your huskies up the river,
Dared the unknown, led the way, and clutched the prize?
Have you marked the map's void spaces, mingled with the mongrel races,
Felt the savage strength of brute in every thew?
And though grim as hell the worst is, can you round it off with curses?
Then hearken to the Wild—it's wanting you.

"The Great, White Silence.

Have you suffered, starved and triumphed, groveled down, yet grasped at glory,
Grown bigger in the bigness of the whole?
"Done things" just for the doing, letting babblers tell the story,
Seeing through the nice veneer the naked soul?
Have you seen God in His splendors, heard the text that nature renders?
(You'll never hear it in the family pew.)
The simple things, the true things, the silent men who do things—
Then listen to the Wild—it's calling you.

They have cradled you in custom, they have primed you with their preaching,
They have soaked you in convention through and through;
They have put you in a showcase; you're a credit to their teaching—
But can't you hear the Wild—it's calling you.
Let us probe the silent places let us seek what luck betide us;
Let us journey to a lonely land I know.
There's a whisper on the night-wind, there's a star agleam to guide us,
And the Wild is calling, calling . . . let us go.

Is Civilization About To Be Wiped Off Earth?

An Australian Who Has Been Among the Russians Believes It Is Collapsing Now, and Will Be Destroyed Within Less Than a Hundred Years.

By Charme Seeds

CIVILIZATION will not collapse in ten, twenty or one hundred years: it is collapsing now.

One might desert his breakfast grapefruit to pause over the thought.

A young Australian who has wandered back and forth over the face of the earth comes out with this statement and develops the thought. The young Australian is Thomas Skeyhill, the singing-soldier, who came through the super-drama of the seige of Gallipoli and who was blinded by a bursting shell.

Since the armistice he has spent many months in Russia for the purpose of extracting some of the truths from the chaos within.

"Civilization is collapsing NOW," says Skeyhill.

We almost allow the breakfast toast to get cold in our pause over the thought.

The collapse of our civilization?

What can this mean? To be sure histories speak with much flourish of the fall of Rome and the fall of Babylon. Literature tells us in language grandiose of the passing of civilizations Athenian, Egyptian, Arabiana, Chinese. Men lived in an accumulation of glory and then they lay buried beneath the sum of it.

Yes, it is true, ancient civilization passed away. But how dare anyone interrupt our Sunday morning breakfast with the idea that we, too, will one day lie buried beneath another spread of barbarism. Our civilization will collapse? Our civilization is collapsing?

But that is impossible. We sit here quit comfortable in satin negligees and quilted smoking jackets. Our table is spread with delicate china. Deliciously refined honey and pasteurized milk are set before us. An electric graphonola, in an adjoining room gives out a jazz melody.

Little Johnnie prates of the radio which gives him intermittent messages from far places. Suzanne sits at ease on the overstuffed davenport and "does hope that father will be one of the first to buy a touring airplane, before they make a bothersome lot of sky-traffic regulations."

OUR civilization collapsing? Impossible. Absurd idea. We go back to our grapefruit and to our toast which almost has grown cold while we were idly contemplating the impossibly absurd idea.

"The downfall of Russia marks the beginning of the disintegration of modern civilization," says Mr. Skeyhill, in the face of those who go back to the grapefruit and the toast. "Unless some firm, stable government is developed within Russia it is bound to go back to a state of barbarism. Without this government Russia will split into various small states over which Japan, the Balkans, France, Germany and all the rest of us will fight. Another world war will ensue and the whole earth will become submerged in barbarism."

These and many things the Australian soldier-poet has to say of Russia. And while he believes that the communists are "playing billiards with the stars," he maintains that bolshevism must be recognized because it is "better than no government."

"History is a race between education and catastrophe," says H. G. Wells.

In each civilization gone, it is apparent that catastrophe has won. The duration of each has been different from that of the others. Some extended over a period two or three or a few more hundreds of years. Egyptian civilizatfon endured through three thousand years.

Civilization springs up as a flame of the gods and in a short space of time it is quenched by floods of barbarism. By an intricate system of irrigation Babylon joined the Tigres and the Euphrates so that the valley became exceedingly fertile and flowed with milk and honey. But Babylon reveled in her hanging gardens and paid no heed to the handwriting on the wall. Babylon fell, her art of irrigation was lost and now Babylonia lies, an arid desert beneath the scorching sun.

IN the days of Arabian supremacy her star-gazers sought out innumerable wonders of the sky. They studied and calculated and transmitted their knowledge to the upbuilding of their civilization. Arabian civilization fell. The act of star-gazing was lost. Astronomers of the twentieth century grope for the knowledge that lies buried beneath barbaric years.

"There are three things that kill civilization," says Thomas Skeyhill. "First, wars of conquest; second, civil wars, and third, the breakdown of moral and spiritual life. Take Russia, for instance. She occupied one-sixth of the land surface of the earth. And she set about it to make this figure one-fifth.

"She waged wars in conquest of Poland, Finland, Bessarabia and the Dardanelles. She has been beset by civil wars—the revolution of 1905 and the late revolution. And after that came the collapse of her moral and spiritual entity. Selfishness, greed and avarice run rampant within the country.

"The 'whites' want to kill the 'reds' and the 'reds' want to kill the 'whites;' czarism wants to get back to the old times; bolshevism wants to stay in power so that it can impose its dogmatic regime. The peasant wants only land. The worker thinks only of the factory. And so it goes. The spirit of revenge and avarice runs rampant. The return to barbarism is imminent."

A look at Petrograd through Skeyhill's eyes, which were restored to sight through American physicians, will tell us something of how the grandeur of a city may be crazed in the dust. From a population of over two million Petrograd has fallen to about 500,000.

Petrograd, once among the gayest cities of Europe, is reduced to sackcloth and ashes. Once the streets were alive with the rustle of people, gay, ambitious, uplooking. Now those of the 500,000 who stray forlornly about the streets are gaunt forms. Starvation has gnawed away their flesh and tragic grief has burned the ambition from their eyes.

Every wooden house within the city has been torn down for the fuel it affords. All the furniture and woodwork have been chopped up and burned to keep these gaunt forms from freezing through the long Russian winter.

Disease runs a ravaging course throughout the city, taking a heavy toll. There are no medicines. There are no doctors. Sanitary conditions are unbelievably bad. There have been no repairs during the long years of the war or since, and there are no materials with which to make such repairs.

Petrograd, once one of the gayest capitals in all the splendor of Europe, now lies rotting in miserable decay.

IS this the beginning of the decline of that which we have so splendidly built up? What we have lost by the burial of the great cities of the past we are aware. From far Cathaway we have redeemed something of her gift of gunpowder, silks and printing. From Egypt we reclaimed some of the lost art of engineering, although there is much of this civilization which we have never reclaimed.

In ancient Greece wise men worked out philosophies that have endured; medical advices, ideas of government and ethics which we, in what we consider our might, cannot surpass. They builded buildings the beauty of which is still a marvel to men's minds. They made vases and statues which stand on pedestals above modern art. Their civilization touched things superfine.

Then came conquests, internal strivings and the break-down of the moral code. When Athens fell there were thirty slaves to every free man within the city.

Ancient Rome gave us art and roads and government. Rome made her conquests, was stricken by internal strivings and lay back in the lap of an immoral luxury. The race betwen education and catastrophe.

Catastrophe destroyed the "glory that was Greece, and the grandeur that was Rome" and left us only fragments whereby we may merely guess the sum of it. There was not nough education to overwhelm catastrophe. There was not enough enlightenment of mind to avert physical tragedy.

"BUT our passing civilization is not irrevocable," says this internationalist, Skeyhill. "Our education may be enough to bring us through this crisis. With the proper manipulation of world politics we may be able to save ourselves from fates that have buried Nineveh and Tyre."

Mr. Wells said that the conference at Washington would either be a last futile effort to save a stricken civilization or a definite milestone on a new and nobler order of mankind. Mr. Skeyhill adopts the thought that perhaps the Washington conference was a "milestone" instead of a "last futile effort."

"Washington led to Genoa," says Skeyhill. "Genoa may lead back to Washington and on to some other conference until, by a yearly meeting of the nations, civilization may be tided over when catastrophe knocks at the threshold. At the Washington conference we scrapped ships so that there is more money for education. We may scrap our arms so that by the next conference education may have a stronger hold.

"We are only getting 30 per cent of the happiness we should out of life. We spend on armaments what we should spend on research, study and education. Research should be a matter of government and not be left to the caprices of the individual."

And then with a new fire in the eyes that have once been blind, the Australian says: "Patriotism must give way to internationalism, else our skyscrapers will be brought to the dust, our radios and air motors will disappear and our electricity will return to the skies."

NO DRAMATIS PERSONAE

by J. Frank Davis

"The hell cat"

Blue Ribbon Fiction

Lure of Gambling, Lore of the Old Texas, Love of Woman, and Luck of Cowboys.

It was the sight of a bevy of pretty girls that started him. One of them in particular held my eye.

THIS story was told me by Shutter Snell, who dresses like a retired evangelist and used to deal faro for Nelse Kincaid when San Antonio was wide open and the killings averaged one a night. He said it had some kind of interesting things in it, but he didn't see how I could make any use of it in my trade, because it didn't have no dramatis personae.

Shutter amplified this. Unless he was mistaken—in which case I could correct him, but he knew he wasn't—dramatis personae meant characters in a drama. A drama had to have a hero and a heroine and a villain and probably some comedians. Maybe you could get along with a hero or a heroine, but not without both of them, and the fact that there were two or three villains wouldn't make up for it. And in this yarn about the time June Kincaid helped her father go after Cole Gurney's roll the leading man was a fool cow puncher who drank too much and the only woman in the whole cast was a hell cat, and, dammit, you couldn't make that kind of material into heroes and heroines, could you? He left it to me, straight.

While admitting the probability that his point was well taken, I encouraged Shutter to proceed with his reminiscence. It is not often or easily that he speaks of the ancient days, and when he does, although he sometimes rambles and has queer ideas of what are the important and unimportant parts of his stories, his speech frequently drips precious jewels of information.

"Was this daughter of Kincaid's the hell cat?" I asked, to get him going smoothly.

If I wasn't mistaken, it was the sight of a bunch of pretty girl who had just arrived there where we sat on the roof garden of the Hotel Bonham that had started him. There were four of them, all aged somewhere around twenty, all dainty and vivacious and bubbling over with youth. One of them in particular, a brown haired, brown eyed maid with a mischievous mouth and a delicious creamy coloring of skin that was all her unartificial own, especially held my eye. They were in filmy summer frocks, fresh from some dinner party perhaps, and with a quartet of clean looking boys and a plump chaperon had come to dance.

I had gushed a trifle over their attractiveness as they arrived, and Shutter had surveyed them in silence, fallen into a reverie, and come out of it to say:

"I never told you, did I, about how Nelse Kincaid planted three cards cold at the bottom of the box and had his girl tip Cole Gurney to 'em—crooked?" Following this came his dissertation as to the absence of value to a writing man of a story without hero or heroine.

"Hell cat was right," he agreed, to my query. "She was sure bad—and she wasn't. You get me, don't you? One of those girls that raise hell with a man and always stop short of paying for it. There didn't nybody use this here word 'vamp' in those days. If they had, that was June Kincaid. She didn't have any mother and she didn't have any principles to speak of, and her father was a bad ombre with a pair of hands that could do things to a deck of cards old Hermann the Card King never even dreamed of, and the luck never to get caught at it. Cold steel nerve, too. Would take a chance and pull a thing right under the noses of a whole hospeful of gamblers that were wise to all the tricks and looking for them; wait till I tell you. But knowing when to take his medicine and call it a day! you'll see that, too."

IT became apparent, now, that Shutter Snell was going to speak of matters regarding which, ordinarily, he is to say the least noncommittal.

He is not accustomed to admit that in the period when he was connected with temples of chance he ever was concerned with any of the tricks of his profession not recognized as legitimate; indeed, I have many times heard him assert that it had been his principle never to be employed by any gambler who was not strictly on the level.

Shutter has been respectable for more than twenty years, having possessed the foresight to buy centrally located land in San Antonio at a time when it could be had for a song, and, as he once confidentially informed me, not such a darn musical song at that. He has intimate friends among the best people of the older cattle set. Not every one among his acquaintances knows that in youth he was a gambler, and those who are told it are given to udnerstand that he was invarably a square gambler, which I have found usually to mean one who does not cheat unless the other fellow starts it. Thus this almost admiring comment of his relative to the dexterity of Nelse Kincaid was an unexpected admission.

"So she went vamping along, and getting away with it," he said, "and by and by along come this Cole Gurney."

Gently I reminded him that this was hardly the place for a tale to begin. He hadn't told me how she vamped and why.

June Kincaid, he went back to say, was something like eighteen or nineteen years old then, and as pretty as they made them. And nobody had ever had much of anything to do with bringing her up except old Nelse, who had his own ideas as to how a pretty daughter should be helpful to the proprietor of a notorious gambling house.

Nelse would have killed the man that wronged her in a minute, and he kept strict track of her comings and goings and saw to it that she kept straight, although it was no more than fair to say that she never showed any inclination to be otherwise; but there are morals and morals, and the kind June Kincaid had would have fitted those young ladies that sat on the bench and combed their hair and sang songs that induced sailors, according to that old story, to steer their boats plumb on the rocks. Yes, that's the word. Sirens.

She never associated with the dance hall girls; in fact, it was seldom that she went on to the floor and danced—never, unless there was a victim in tow. Her activities were in the gambling room and at the bar, when the crowd lined along it was not too rough, where she had a sort of private personal place at the end nearest the gambling room at which she held court, as you might say, greeting her friends and encouraging them to believe this was the night when luck would break their way at the tables. Especially favored friends she drank with, but a certain monotony distinguished her orders. Invariably she called for a little gin, and was served out of a special bottle with a third of a whisky glass of excellent spring water. On occasion she showed the effect of her potations mildly; she had a most convincing cough that sometimes followed tossing the fiery stuff into her throat.

Young men off the range, known to have a desirable quantity of cash on hand and to be careless with their savings when illuminated, found her an affable person. Nelse selected them. After they had drunk freely—out of no bottle of innocuous spring water—and her ingenuous brown eyes had worked havoc with their sense of values, tolling them over to one of the roulette wheels or up against a faro bank was really no feat at all. Especially if, their choice running to faro, June offered as a special favor to bring them luck by keeping cases for a deal or two.

They played at Shutter's bank, usually, because that was the one behind which Nelse Kincaid himself commonly sat high in the lookout chair, with a sharp eye on the play at that particular table, and also because stakes ordinarily ran higher at that table than elsewhere, and the size of stakes is often a contagious thing; a boy with a roll in his pocket is unlikely to pike if the other players in his game are betting freely. Especially unlikely if the prettiest girl in the southwest is keeping cases for the game and occasionally looking across at him with expressive eyes. His tendency, under such circumstances, is to be at least reckless and probably careless.

Shutter made it quite clear, without putting the matter into definite words, that these games, at which the girl kept track of the cards as they slid out of the deal box and her admirers were encouraged to make their bets high, wide, and handsome, were not customarily crooked. He implied that when he dealt they were never crooked. Sometimes luck would get to running seriously against the house, Junes' friend would begin to win and to bet still more heavily, and old Nelse, up there in the lookout, would slip Shutter the signal to say his eyes were beginning to ache and that he would like to skip a deal or two, whereupon Nelse would climb down and relieve him.

LUCK was pretty likely to turn against the plunging player soon after. When he was broke June would surrender the case rack to one of the professional case-keepers, laughingly assure the victim that his turn would surely come next time, and fit away with him to the end of the bar to join him in a consoling drink on the house.

It was a boy who went plumb broke, so that he couldn't come back to play any more, who gave her the name. He and she had been chummy for more than a fortnight, so that his pals had all been jealous and he had got positively cocky about it, and then when his money was gone she let him down suddenly, due to another man in the offing that Nelse had picked to be his successor.

He came in one night and bought a drink or two and piked with five or ten dollars at the wheel, and went over to start one of his old joyous talks with her, and found her chilly as a January norther. Some of his friends—they were a roughish bunch—gave him the laugh. "A lot I care!" he cried defiantly, being young. Shutter was getting himself a sandwich during his half hour lay-off period at midnight, not far from where they stood at the bar, and heard him. "A lot I care! Damn little hell cat!" Which showed how terribly much he did care, because it wasn't customary in those days to call young ladies names, not even young ladies who assisted their fathers in the profitable conduct of a gambling house. If Nelse Kincaid had heard him say it he might have come a-smoking.

Cole Gurney was a big chap about twenty-three or twenty-four years old, with blue eyes, a lot of thick wavy hair, and a manner, some ways, that was even younger than his age. He had been working a year or two for the Circle Lazy D outfit, and somebody up north somewhere had died and left him ten or fifteen thousand dollars, and he was going to get him a bunch of cows of his own. That is what brought him into San Antonio. Before he had been in Nelse's place three times Nelse knew all about the ten or fifteen thousand, and that he had it on deposit over in the McCluskey bank.

It developed that the boy had a failing and a virtue. It was easy for him to drink too much. When he began to get under the influence he developed an amazing streak of stinginess. Nelse Kincaid, no doubt, listed these traits reversely.

Well organized, with seven or eight drinks disposed of, Gurney's idea of financial recklessness was to buy one twenty dollar stack of chips at a roulette table and put them all down at once, win or lose, and then quit. From the player's standpoint, Shutter conceded in telling this, there might be a lot ways less indicative of wisdom in bucking a game where the percentage in favor of the house is as devastating as in roulette. Cole seemed faro to be lacking in sufficiently brisk action, but he played it occasionally. Especially when June offered to keep cases. He played two dollar chips, mostly, with perhaps five or ten on the turn, when the bank pays four for one if the player guesses the correct order in which the last three cards came out of the box, and limited his losses to fifty dollars or so.

NELSE, with his mind on that ten or fifteen thousand over in the McCluskey bank, was plumb disgusted.

June never for a minute let it affect her work. Drunk or sober, play high or play low, she smiled her sweetest on Gurney. Her eyes had never beamed liking on one of his predecessors more convincingly, or more effectively. If ever she owned a slave it was Cole. He spent all his evenings in the place, and when he couldn't be with her—and naturally she wasn't foolish enough to let any one customer monopolize her smiles—he never left off looking at her.

He got, one night, to talking big brother stuff.

"Nothing," she told Nelse, when he asked her the next day what all the confidential conversation had been about. "Nothing. Except he said I didn't fit with the other girls in the place."

"Who the hell ever dares to say you do?" Nelse demanded. "He's got a nerve coupling you up with them."

"And gave me a dare," she said, laughing a little, but a laugh without any great amount of amusement in it. "He said he kind of didn't like to see a nice young lady drinking."

"Damn critical, ain't he?" said Nelse, grinning at the thought of the special gin bottle of spring water. "What was the dare?"

"He said he'd swear off drinking, cold, if I would."

Nelse was irritated, but encouraged, too. "He might almost as well be a teetotaler, at that," he grumbled, "the way he plays 'em up against his chest when he's lit. Stick to him, June; we'll find a way to make him loosen, yet. But don't give him too many chances to spout this confidential stuff."

June patted him. "Little June can take care of herself, daddy," she said.

"Bet your life she can," he responded proudly. He had a tremendous admiration for the girl, had Nelse. And affection, too. In a way. Some warped in his ideas as to how a father ought to bring up a daughter, to be sure, but what could you expect? He was what he was, and she was his. If he wasn't proud of his business, he wasn't ashamed of it, and he didn't know any reason why she should be.

It was a week or so after this that he heard about how badly Cole Gurney wished he had two or three times as much capital as laid over there in the McCluskey bank to his credit waiting to be checked out. It was really a chance of a lifetime. A ranch, with a fair acreage under fence and some three thousand head of stock there and on the range, easily worth fifty thousand dollars, which could be had for thirty-five thousand—perhaps thirty—because old Sim Tarrant, who owned it, had got bumped off in a little ruckus about a waterhole and his widow wanted to clean up and go back to her folks in Illinois. But which had to be paid for absolutely in cash; old Miz Tarrant didn't want recollection or reminder of Texas once she left; vendor's notes, even at ten per cent, did not interest her at all.

Nelse worked out a characteristic scheme of temptation.

AT this point in his story, Shutter Snell, recounting the tale across the table while the orchestra jazzed and the shuffle and swing of sliding feet beat rhythmically about the dance floor beside us, became somewhat vague in several respects. It was not clear, for example, how he, who never participated in ways that were dark, came to be taken into his employer's confidence, nor was he able, apparently, to go into any details regarding the technique planned by Nelse Kincaid whereby June should get Cole Gurney to risk his bankroll on her unsupported promise that she would see he didn't lose. I take it Nelse saw how serious the affair was getting with Cole, and sensed that the boy might even be thinking of asking June to marry him, and that he staged some mock quarrel with the girl, so that she could go to Cole for sympathy and seem to be at odds with her father, which would make plausible her confession.

This confession—Shutter did not know how it was worded, or what led up to it, of course—involved the old man's probity, and June's. At times, when there was a big game, a faro deck might be partially stacked, to affect the three cards in the last turn, and June might tip a victim as to how the cards were to come out, and tip him falsely. She was to imply that her father wanted her to do this, but that she would not. If Cole wanted to gamble five or ten thousand dollars on one turn, she would undertake with Nelse to double-cross him—and would double-cross Nelse himself.

There was some sort of revenge motif as an excuse, Shutter said, and also there was the ingenious use of an old rumor—quite nonsensical—which Cole doubtless would have heard in the gossip of the place, that June wasn't Nelse's daughter. All in all, it was a plot that older and wiser infatuated men than Cole Gurney might have succumbed to.

Then, just on the eve of it, June balked.

She never associated with the dance hall girls

She said—and again, if Shutter had no active part in these things, I do not understand how it came about that the conversation was in his hearing—that Cole was a nice kid and that it was a shame. Nelse Kincaid thereupon flared.

"I suppose," he sneered, "the young idiot has been telling you if you was away from the bad influence of your daddy, he'd be half inclined to marry you."

"He didn't say 'half,'" she retorted.

"I thought so. Well, there's two reasons that I know of why he wouldn't."

He amplified, at her look of inquiry:

"One is that he ain't the marrying kind. But if he was, I'd see he didn't. When you get married, which won't be for many a day yet, we'll pick more of a man than he is."

"I'm sort of curious to know just how you'd stop it, daddy," she said, and something in the way she drawled it—some inherited quality of his own cold, sneering speech when he was angered—made him reply, nastily:

"Suppose he was tipped that somebody had a prior lien—that if you married anybody, it ought by all rights to be somebody else."

She went white at the underlying significance and brutality of the threat. "Such a lie!" she choked.

"He wouldn't know it was, would he? It would fit in quite plausible with the bar, and the dance hall, and the associates that he wished you wouldn't keep, wouldn't it? At that, would it be so much of a lie? It's Bible truth that any time you get married, it will be to somebody else than him—the curly headed fool!"

JUNE bit her lip and got control of herself, for she had an intimate acquaintance with the old man's temper and vindictiveness.

"I didn't know," she said, slowly, "that you had anything against him—personal."

"O, you didn't!" he growled. "You think I admired to have the smirking idiot tell you, in your own father's place, that your own father wasn't man enough to look out for you."

"When did he?"

"Didn't he? Didn't he say you oughtn't to be around here where these other girls are? Didn't he kick at your taking a drink—as if I don't know whether you ought to drink or not? As if I ain't competent to 'tend to you?"

She opened her mouth as if to contradict or protest, and closed it. Her lips set in a straight line. Then she began over again, saying: "He meant well."

"Hell's paved with 'em!"!" Nelse snapped. "Well, life's too short to use it all up talking. Do we pull the play as set up, or don't we—tonight? Because, one way or the other, this pup Gurney is going to get sent about his business. He can be chased back onto the range by the need of replenishing a busted roll and disappointment in love, or he can be chased back by disappointment in love all by itself—you're the one to say which. But one thing I'll tell yo straight, young lady. We ain't running the house for our health. You've made unprofitable eyes at him as long as you're going to."

June looked straight into her father's face and saw he meant it, and she squared her shoulders and threw her chin up. "All right," she said, shortly. "We'll pull the play tonight. What are the three cards?"

"That's sense!" cried Nelse. "It will be the first deal after Shutter goes to eat, at twelve. The turn will be ace, king, and some little card. The little one is immaterial; it will be at the bottom. They will come out king, ace."

"And I tell him they are fixed to come out ace, king."

"Right. You tell him to play 'em ace, king."

"He won't have it all in cash, of course."

"I'll take his check, if he guarantees it. You know how I stand with McCluskey."

"Afterwards, if he makes a disturbance and tells how he thought it was planted—"

"He won't make any great disturbance here," Nelse promised. "As to telling, he'll be drunk, won't he? Laugh at him. I don't think there'll be any scene, though. I ain't figuring he'll blab that he's been made a monkey of. You'll keep out of his way afterwards, natchully, but if you and him ever should meet up and he should corner you alone, you tell him I threw 'em out different from what I said I was going to, or that you misunderstood the lay, or, if he is drunk enough tonight so you think maybe you can get away with it, that you told him to play king, ace, and you never was more shocked in your life than when you saw him lay the bet down different from what you had said."

Kincaid rolled himself a cigarette. "But I don't guess you'll ever see him in our place again," he concluded.

"I believe you are right, father," June agreed. Which ought to have set Nelse to thinking. Not a dozen times in her life had she called him anything but daddy.

SO at about midnight, just before it was time for Shutter to take his half hour off for lunch, June who had talked long and earnestly with him in a booth at the side of the dance hall, tolled Gurney to the faro table, laughingly told the case keeper to go and smoke a cigarette or two, and took charge of the case rack.

A good many drinks had been served to the curtained booth during their conversation, and it was plain to be seen that Gurney was more than ordinarily jingled. He got a seat at the high card end of the table, and bought his customary fifty dollars' worth of chips. Thus he was directly to the left of June, who sat between him and the dealer. He looked at her more than he did at the layout, and put his little bets down haphazard and without judgment, ignoring the record of case cards and taking reckless chances on "splits."

It calls for concentrated attention to the business in hand for a case keeper to make accurate record of all the cards as they leave the deal box, and June looked up at him only occasionally, but when she did he got the benefit of one of her dazzling smiles and laughed fatuously in return. He lost his fifty dollars before the deal was finished and bought another fifty dollar stack. During the following deal he bought again. Seldom, theretofore, had he ever been willing to lose more than a hundred dollars at one sitting.

Now, as to just when the deck was fixed for the slaughter I am not clear, because Shutter wasn't. He implied that, of course, it was done after Kincaid took charge, and I am inclined to think it was. At any rate, the sleight of hand which placed a king, an ace, and a trey at the bottom of the box, notwithstanding the ostentatious shuffling and cutting, came at some time during the comparative confusion attendant upon the change of dealers.

When a deal came to its end soon after twelve o'clock Shutter pushed back his green eyeshade, half turned in his chair toward where Nelse sat in the high lookout seat, and remarked: "Time to feed, cap'n." Kincaid glanced in the direction of the clock, nodded, and climbed down to slide into the place Shutter vacated, being careful, as they always were, not to disturb with his knee the pistol that hung suspended under the table edge, its butt handy for a sudden clutch.

"It's sure a slow night," he commented good naturedly as he settled himself and looked about the table, while the players prepared to put down their initial bets. "Here it is tomorrow, and nobody wins much and nobody loses much. Come get the old man! Why don't somebody sting the house good?"

"Gimme fifty more," said Gurney, stiff itpped. "Going to take you up on that. No chance to sting the house with only fifteen."

THIS won a thin, impersonal smile from some of the players, sixty-five dollars not being an amount with which a bank of the caliber and capacity of Kincaid's would be likely to suffer. The table fell into the tense quietness characteristic of faro, and the deal proceeded.

Shutter did not get any lunch, but swallowed a hasty drink and came back into the room, where he remained over by the door. The quiet group at the faro game was picked out sharply by the wide shaded hanging lamp overhead. In that illumination, striking down across his wavy hair, Cole Gurney looked more like Buck than ever.

I had to interrupt Shutter at this point, with all the chance it necessitated of throwing him off his stride with the real dramatics of the yarn presumably impending, but he had not previously mentioned any person of the name of Buck.

Hadn't he? He sure thought he had. He had noticed the resemblance first time Cole Gurney ever came into Kincaid's. Just about the same size. Same kind of hair and eyes. Same jolly sort of reckless laugh. About the same age, he was, as Buck the last time Shutter saw him, when he left home up there in Kentucky to come to Texas. A powerful lot Shutter had always thought of Buck. Kind of wild, too, the boy was. Mother used to worry a right smart about him. Younger brother? Of course. Sure. Thought he said so.

June looked up from her case keeping presently and announced:

"Last turn!"

She ran her eye down the undisturbed buttons on their little wires, like a Chinese abacus, and called the remaining cards:

"Ace, trey, king."

"Last turn," monotonously chanted Kincaid, following the customary dealer's routine, "and four for one if you call the order."

He sat back to await the final adjustment of bets.

"I great mind," said Gurney, with drunken solemnity, "I great mind to make you a real bet."

"Go as far as you like," Nelse told him cheerfully.

"What you mean? How big a limit?"

Kincaid's reply was a little contemptuous. There would seem to the encircling players and spectators small chance that an habitually modest player like Gurney would want to stake anything spectacular.

"To you," he said, "the roof is off. The blue, blue sky."

"D'you mean that?" Gurney ogled. "D'you mean it?"

"The higher you stack 'em the better we like it," Kincaid told him, still smiling.

Gurney got out a little wad of bills and surveyed them. There couldn't have been more than two hundred dollars. "I'd have to write a check," he said. "I don't s'pose you'd take a check."

"I would if you guarantee, on your word, there'll be enough in the bank in the mawnin' to cover it if you lose." Nelse was still half smiling provocatively. Gurney dug a checkbook out of his pocket and muttered something about a pen.

Prince of Wales Had Several Embryo Love

Uncle Sam's Daughters Gave His Royal Highness a Cordial, Democratic Welcome and He Showed Unmistakably That He Liked It.

THAT the American girl has paid the Prince of Wales the highest tribute which has ever been accorded him is probably true. She discovered that he was an attractive boy, that he had a personality, that he was an individual, that he was human.

Being quite free from bondage to the glamor of rank and position the American girl critically stood off the young prince and measured him for what he was worth as a man. And shorn of his accoutrement of glory, shorn of his royally accumulated traditions, the American girl found him a nice person. She found him a man for all that, and that of prestige and position.

When Edward VII visited America he found its women especially attractive. Some American grandmothers of today planting verbenas in Kansas and states west, will remember gala days in New York when the late Edward forgot royal robes to the extent of having what Americans call a royal good time. In it all, it seems, he was enthusiastic in his admiration of American women.

When the Prince of Wales came to America it was rather expected that he should follow in his grandfather's footsteps in this respect. In fact why shouldn't he like the American girl? She wears an air of independence that no other girl in the world possesses. She may lack in the old world charm but her new born audacity (may we use this word without being misunderstood?) makes her none the less fascinating.

It is conceded by many critics of such things in Europe and America that the American girl knows best how to wear clothes. Clothes do not make the man but the American girl knows just how much they do for the woman. And besides this matter of clothes, it is sometimes conceded that the American girl is very pretty.

THE American girl expected the Prince of Wales to find her attractive.

After the war it was announced that Wales would pay a visit to America. It was rumored that he might, by some chance or by some carefully designed arrangement, take an American bride. There were reasons why this might be a coup de maitre.

The American girl bought some new baronette satin sports clothes, and some new sequin evening things and sat back to say, "Well, bring on the prince!"

You see, the Prince of Wales is generally conceded to be the most eligible bachelor in the world. And every maid in America, down to the least demisemiquaver in the whole aria, feels herself eligible to marry any man whom her whim fancies. This is the blessed heritage of the American-born.

The American girl is born reaching for the moon. She is taught to grasp for strange planets and that there is no star to which she may not climb. She reaches and grasps and climbs nonchalantly, not seriously, as in a game, not as a drab and frastic business.

The London press indicated that the prince was considering an American girl. "That's quite all right," said the American girl, not in the least awed. "We may really like the boy. Who can tell?"

To the American girl, without the encumbrance of glorified tradition, the fair-haired prince seemed much more attainable than he seemed to her English sisters across the way. Traditions are ever detestable to the American-born.

The American girl said nonchalantly—oh, quite nonchalantly—"Let him come along. If he is attractive and wears his clothes well, we will consider him."

There are reasons, quite obvious reasons, why English girls may stand in awe of his royal higness, the Prince of Wales. The divine right of kings is a phrase with which these girls have been familiar since they learned to speak. And "the divine right of kings" is more than a phrase to them. It means something. From it is bred an awe that the American-born can not comprehend.

NOT so many years ago came an outcry in England against the fact that many peers married beneath them. The fact that peers were debasing their blood was deplored publicly in the "Throne," the semi-official organ of the English royal court. The articles which appear in the "Throne" either came directly from the royal family or from these who stand intimately close to royalty.

At the time this outcry against the debasing of hallowed blood came off the press in England, it was said to have been dictated by the queen herself. As the mother of any eligible young man is the most formidable of all barriers to his approach, it is easily understood why English girls may be a bit shy where the Prince of Wales is concerned.

And it was generally known before the war that the queen was engrossed with the idea of royalty, if we may be permitted to express it in this lowly way. Royalty was "next to God," as certain Americans have said it.

The "Throne" went on at great length about this matter of the debasing blood of the blood of peers. Something must be done, it said, "if the supremacy of the best qualities of the English nation over dangerous opportunism and irresponsible demagogy is not to be extinguished forever."

American girls placed their stamp of approval upon the Prince of Wales because he showed himself to be not only a gentleman but a regular human being.

"The one way in which the dignity of the house of lords can be maintained," said the "Throne," "is by the personal prestige and unquestionable fitness of its members for the exalted position that they hold. And that prestige—if indeed the very existence of the lords is anything but a mockery and a laughing stock—is threatened by a development of recent years which every day grows to greater and more menacing proportions. We refer to the increasing number of unions between hereditary peers and ladies of inferior station—mesalliances which strike at the very heart of the whole raison d'etre of the house of lords."

Now the years of the war have intervened since this outcry sprang from the lips of Queen Mary, if indeed it really did spring from her lips. Many things have come between. There has been much said in the way of democracy and there has been much done by way of it.

But remembering these things of Queen Mary it seems quite logical to surmise his mother may be back of the faction which wants to see Wales marry into his own family.

THEN there is this: Lady Rachel Cavendish may have become tired of waiting around for the boy who hunted elephants in the Indian jungle and blew kisses to Madam Butterflies in Japan. At any rate her engagement to the prince's younger brother is rumored. Now this rumor must necessarily be accompanied by a new rumor for the Prince of Wales. One can not take a fiancee away from a prince without substituting another, can one?

When Wales hears the rumor that he is to marry his first cousin, Lady Mary Cambridge, he may supplant it with another. He is a clever boy, in a way. He is old enough to be married. His family and the press have been marrying him off for a number of years past. He must keep them supplied with rumors.

In the meantime, doubtless he follows after his own heart down a long trail of romance.

Which brings us back to the fact that this trail once led him into America. But, it is rumored among the soldiery that his Americans romances began back quite close to the place that used to be known as No Man's Land. The story goes that she served Salvation Army doughnuts or Red Cross chocolate to the boys who lived by the excitement of bursting shells and whose joys were reduced to doughnuts and chocolate.

It was one of those nights. A barrage lit up the sky in the too-near distance. An English "Waac" drove a camion like mad over roads that were shell-eaten. Before there was any sign of the barrage display she had been ordered to conduct supplies to a certain post which was a distance back of the front-line trenches. Her companion was taken ill and had to be left at an American relief station.

The "Waac" pulled her cap over her eyes and climbed back to the heavy steering wheel. A slim little American girl with big brown eyes clambered up beside the driver.

"You can't go alone," she said. "You can't handle the things by yourself."

"Oh, there may be a spare man about when I get there," returned the "Waac."

"But you are sure to have trouble on the roads. Tire and other things."

"I can change a bloomin' tire in a thrice."

"But I want to go."

"It's a rotten night for you to be out," the "Waac" had a kindness in her voice which had been born of the many things these English girls experienced in their service. "But you're a game little piece, so come along."

TIMIDLY the American climbed aboard the truck. All the swagger that had been accredited to her back in Main street fled from her shoulders as she faced the "Waac" who had seen several years of service on the borders of No Man's Land. The brown-eyed girl was awed by the big adventure that lay before her.

The road was bad, as they had known it would be. And there were bursting shells as they had not known there would be. And along the road they picked up a British Tommy. He climbed upon the chauffeur's bench and the three of them talked intermittently—small talk—as one talks in great moments.

There was fear in their hearts. And there was courage in their hearts. Everything in the whole universe lay immediately before them. And yet nothing in the whole universe mattered. It was pitch black and the camion careened and lurched and fairly overturned.

The American girl shuddered in the darkness, then she knew the shudder was a thrill. The "Waac" hung to the wheel as a skipper in a maddened sea and the British Tommy, frail and refined and likable (the American girl could sense these qualities in the darkness) spoke lightly of things that were close to death and held up a bold front of courage as though it were the most trivial thing in life.

Then came the lights in the sky and the American girl could see that the Tommy was an officer and that he was a good-looking boy. He was much like the picture she carried in the locket about her neck. She reached for it. Just to touch it was a comfort in times of stress.

"It's gone!" she said aloud, and immediately felt that her cry was tremendously out of place.

"What is it?" asked the boy-officer.

"My locket—it's gone."

"I suppose you wore his picture in it?" asked the young Britisher.

"Yes. And my mother's. He was killed—with the American marines."

"I say, that's rotten luck."

Then there was a long silence.

"You don't carry any pictures with you? Pictures of people you love back home?" asked the brown-eyed girl.

THERE was a new stir of life and they knew they had come to the end of the long, hard way.

"I only carry my father's picture," said the boy as he jumped down from the truck.

He struck a light. In the flare of the match the American girl could see in his palm a golden sovereign on which were stamped the features of George V.

"The Prince of Wales!" The brown eyes opened wide.

"Your royal highness," said the "Waac," with a coutesy, "the little American is the gamest bit you ever traveled with, eh?"

When the battleship Renown, which carried the Prince of Wales to America, turned her nose westward through the waves his royal highness thought often of the brown-eyed girl whom he had met one dark night in France. That is, it is rumored that he thought much of her.

It is known that he spent some time in New York searching out an address of a girl whose name was not to be found in the blue book and whose name appeared on none of the lists of guests to affairs given in h's honor.

And there were other American girls who at one time or another captured the fancy of the young prince. There was the telephone girl at Colon down on the Panama. There was Margaret Mackenzie, of Columbus, whom he met in the Trinidad islands, whom he danced with often and who was subsequently invited to visit at Buckingham Palace. There was Margaret Calhoun Simonds, daughter of Mrs. C. C. Calhoun, whom he met in Washington. This later Margaret had the distinction of being the only girl in Washington upon whom the prince made a private, unofficial call.

MISS FLORA WHITNEY.

A prince has such a difficult time with his romances. He dances with a girl twice and there are rumors of his engagement to her. He steps aside to be courteous to a girl and he is advised by his official advisor that his attentions are too marked. He smiles upon a girl and his smile brings a frown to the brow of the official advisor.

BEFORE the Prince of Wales came to the shores of America he had said often that he liked American women. He had said often that he admired American woman. For among his closest friends were the American Duchess of Roxburghe, Viscountess Maidstone and Lady Granard.

H. R. H. knew the American Duchess of Marlborough, and the Duchess of Manchester, Lady Decies and Lady Beatty. He had heard much of the first wife of Lord Curzon, the American girl who is said to have made the loveliest vicerine that India has ever known and whose death was lamented by the British empire.

So before his advent to New York and Washington the prince was prejudiced in favor of American women. In these cities he met a gala array of debutantes. They were different, in a way, from the Europeanized Americans he had known, but he liked them none the less. And, in a way, he liked them more.

Some of them were very pretty, some of them were very witty and each one of them could teach the royal gust a trick or two about dancing. They were "full of pep," to use their own expression, and they all wore their gowns beautifully.

Among those whose names appeared on the lists of those invited to functions made in his honor were: Miss Lucille Baldwin, Miss Grace Vanderbilt, Miss Flora Whitney, Miss Marion Tiffany, Miss Dolly Kimball, Miss Genevieve Clendenin, Miss Mercedes de Acosta, Miss Simonds. And so on.

The prince danced and laughed and answered their "kidding." He was dazzled by their gorgeous gowns, intrigued by their smiles and fascinated by their bewitching audacity. He met the flappers and the flappers' older sisters. He liked, oh, ever so many of them. Especially did he like the flappers, because here was something new in women.

Now the modern American high school lad who has grown up with the flappers is not much intrigued by them. But the Prince of Wales had been reared so far from the flapper atmosphere. He had been tucked away in select schools, had done Oxford with a penchant for sports and had spent what otherwise might have been courting days in the murky streets of trench life.

So, it can readily be seen, the flapper was an innovation in the life of the young Britisher. Take, for instance, the little telephone operator at Colon. The wireless sent the word along that the Renown would put in at the harbor on a certain day, making a stop-over on her way through the Panama canal.

IT is a story that many dowagers and grand ladies of American official circles want to forget. And it caused much fuss and turmoil among the dignitaries who so proudly escorted the English prince on his journey. But the prince enjoyed it and the flapper enjoyed it and much of the world enjoyed this little show of democracy.

MISS DOLLY KIMBALL.

The word comes, so it is told by members of the American colony there, that the Prince of Wales would make a stopover visit at Colon. A magnificent ball was planned for his entertainment—or rather for the entertainment of the foreign colony, it afterwards proved. The dowagers and the grand ladies made extensive plans and executed them in splendid seriousness.

The Renown put in at the harbor. With due ceremony the prince landed and was escorted to the function made ready in his honor. He was handed a formal program filled out to the best of diplomatic ability. He was to dance with the wives of military and naval attaches, with the wives of government ministers and the like.

Dowagers and grand ladies were set down in the order of their importance and there was no unimportant name permitted to edge its way into the precious document. The order of his dancing was worked out formally, systematically and with excellent good judgment, according to the diplomatic idea of such affairs.

Before the dancing began, a splendid reception was planned whereby Rosie O'Grady and the governor's lady and all those who ranked somewhere between might have a chance to "meet the prince personally." By the time the prince got around to Margie Williams, the little telephone girl, his arm was aching and he was beginning to hate Colon.

"You may pass me up if you like," said the flapper. "You must be tired enough to pass out of the picture by now."

Wales looked up. The set, professional smile left his lips and a real one broke over his boyish face. Margie was good to look at. And Margie knew when a fellow was bored to death.

"Don't go," said Wales as the flapper passed along. "Are you on my program for a dance?"

"I'm afraid not," said Margie.

Margie passed on, but it developed that during the course of the evening the prince sidestepped the dowagers in favor of the flapper. Overlooking the proper regularity of his program he devoted all his dances to Margie. She danced divinely and she treated Wales like a human being. She forgot his gold lace and his pomp for, after all, they meant not as much to her as the trappings on her switchboard.

NOW the dowagers and the grand ladies, wives of the dignitaries who give prestige to the foreign colony at Colon, were distressed and chagrined. Diplomatic messages passed over the cables to the United States and England. There was much said and, for all the world knows, nothing really done about it.

Life was made miserable for a little telephone girl who was the envy of the colony but diplomatic relations did not cease between Great Britain and America because of this. It may be said that on his return trip Wales did not leave his ship when she put in for Colon.

Wales will probably marry whom he chooses. And yet he has such a time following out his romances. It was a matter of diplomacy which sent him into the United States to meet American girls.

Before the war an English novelist wrote a book in which the hero was the Prince of Wales and the heroine was the daughter of the president of the United States. The two were married and lived happily ever afterwards to the best interests of both Amrica and England. The book was not a sensation but the idea was taken up over the teacups throughout the British empire and the idea was enjoyed by Americans.

After the great war had broken down certain stolid walls of aristocracy and allowed democracy to frolic over the ruins, the advisability of the Prince of Wales marrying outside the prescribed royalty was taken up in a great seriousness. The aristocracy needed new blood. Royal treasuries needed replenishing.

The English press spoke loudly of the possibility and the advisability of the son of the king of England asking as a wife the daughter of an American king of finance. It was during the height of this discussion that Bernard Shaw coined one of his famous phrases in which he reversed the story of King Cophetua and the beggar maid and spoke of the situation as a case of Queen Cophetua and the beggar prince.

Subsequently the American tour was arranged. And Wales was flattered by the fact that American girls liked him for himself. He was flattered, if a prince can be said to be flattered, by the fact that they forgot the pomp and splendor by which he had always found himself engulfed. He was flattered that they, with a mere wave of the hand, threw aside

Harem Beauty, Turkey's First Prima Donna

Now the Sensation of Musical London, Beautiful Agnes de Bonkovska, Only Turkish Diva to Appear in Public, Has Packed Many Experiences Into Her Twenty-Seven Years—Is Thirteenth Child of Turkish Heroine Who Was Married at Thirteen.

By Hayden Church

LONDON.—Musical London has a new sensation. The sensation is a young and beautiful Turkish singer, Madame Agnes de Bonkovska, who has the unique distinction of being the first and only prima donna that her country has produced. Salvoes of applause, such have seldom shaken walls and rattled the windows of a fashionable London temple of melody, such a wealth of flower offerings as rarely have been laid at the feet of a previously unknown artiste and such enthusiastic "notices" in the press as few songstresses new to this metropolis have inspired in recent years rewarded her initial appearance, at the Aeolian hall a few evenings ago.

The tumult of applause and the storm of "bravos" that burst from the crowd of exacting music lovers at the famous concert hall in New Bond street when this diva from the Orient made her final bow, and the unrestrained praise of the musical critics next day were tributes to the rare art, exceptional vocal gifts and fascinating personality of a new aspirant in the world of song for whom, if the promise she now gives is fulfilled, an altogether enviable future may safely be predicted.

SHE has abundant reason to be satisfied with the warmth of her reception here. Loud as were the plaudits that she earned, however, they would have been pitched, one imagines, in a yet higher key had the auditors of Madame de Bonkovska chanced to be aware of the extraordinary story that lies behind this, the first introduction in the western world of a diva who, despite the fact that she is but 27, has already taken by storm the music lovers of super-critical Vienna and Sofia, in addition to those of her native Constantinople.

Experiences as romantic and dramatic as can have figured in the career of an artiste now before the public prove to have fallen to the lot of this golden-haired beauty, who was born in the royal harem of the famous Sultan of Turkey whom Gladstone christened "Abdul the Damned." Who when yet a mere child made her escape therefrom rather than to obey the behest of relatives who had destined her as one of the already numerous wives of one of the richest of Turkish noblemen. And who, after marrying, when she was only 17, the man of her choice, remained the object of the tireless machinations of her elderly and affluent suitor who once succeeded in kidnaping her and even when, for the second time, she slipped through his clutches, warned her that he would never rest until he had achieved his object of possessing her.

OF these extraordinary chapters in the brief but striking career of Turkey's first prima donna scarcely more than a suggestion had been given in the surprisingly modest announcements that heralded her first appearance here. Little, indeed, was known of her beyond the fact that having spent her childhood in the "harem lek" of the sultan's palace at Constantinople, she had emancipated herself at an early age. And that, having become an operatic prima donna, she had made herself famous in southern Europe as one of the finest sopranos of this generation.

What one had heard privately, however, was sufficient to suggest that this fair songbird from the Orient might have a story to tell that would make more than commonly interesting hearing. And having sought Madame de Bonkovska at her hotel I had reason to congratulate myself, for it was surely an amazing history to which I listened from the alluring lips of this fascinating and, in more than one respect, extraordinary woman. A woman who, with her masses of rebellious fair hair, her peaches-and-cream complexion, her wealth of temperament, and her whole atmosphere of what the French call "chic," is as far as possible from suggesting the nationality that is hers by birth. Nor is this surprising, for she is, in the matter of race, a somewhat strange mix-up.

At the outset Madame confessed to the possession of only a few words of English, but she was able to offer me the choice of nine other languages in which to interview her. The tongues which she thus placed at disposal are French, Italian, German, Greek, Turkish, Hungarian, Serbian, Bulgar and Croat, all of which, she explained, she learned to speak fluently while still a child in the "harem lek" of Abdul Hamid.

At right: Turkey's first prima donna, Madame Agnes de Bonkovska, who has made a conquest of London. Her father was court chamberlain to Abdul Hamid, her mother a daring secret agent of the Turks, and her own twenty-seven years have been packed with adventures. When a mere child she escaped from the Sultan's Harem rather than marry an elderly Turkish nobleman.

Madame de Bonkovska in the costume of the harem.

The Dolma-Bastche, or Summer Palace of the Sultan of Turkey, where Madame de Bonkovska was born. It fronts on the Bosphorus. The father of Turkey's first prima donna was Court Chamberlain to Abdul Hamid.

Electing to take a chance with French, I asked Madame de Bonkovska if it were true, as I had heard, that she first saw the light at Yildiz Kiosk?

"I was born," she said, "not at Yildiz, which is the winter palace of the sultan, but at the 'Dohna Bagtche,' or summer palace. My father, Fedor de Bonkovska, was at this time court chamberlain to Abdul Hamid. My father was the son of a noble Pole, but he was born in Constantinople, and his entire career was passed in the service of the Turkish government. He had the title of 'bey-le-beyi,' which one may translate as 'seigneur.' After the downfall of Abdul Hamid he became consul-general at Bucharest. His mother was a Mohammedan and my own mother was a Hungarian, so I am rather a strange blend of races, am I not?

"BUT I must tell you more of my mother," Madame de Bonkovska went on. "She was a very brilliant and intellectual woman, much interested in politics. And during the war between Turkey and Bulgaria she was one of the most daring and successful of the secret agents of the Turks. She was very clever at disguises and, 'made up' as a street hawker, she carried secret dispatches at tremendous risk.

"There was one particular document that was urgently required by the Turkish government. It was in the possession of a Turkish pasha who had been captured by the Bulgars. It was vitally necessary that this document should be obtained and my mother was at length successful in delivering it to her government. For this she was decorated by the sultan with the highest honor it was possible to bestow, the first-class Chefacat, an ornament in brilliants which will be a cherished heirloom in our family. It is now in the possession of my oldest brother.

"But I have not yet told you perhaps the most extraordinary thing about my mother. I myself was married when I was but seventeen. That is very young, n'est ce pas? But my mother, what do you think? She was married when she was only thirteen, and when she was only fourteen had her first child. It is astonishing, yes? And after that she had thirteen children more, five girls and eight boys. I? Oh, I was the thirteenth child." And Madame laughed musically.

"My mother died when I was eleven years old," she continued, "and I was placed under the charge of a Turkish lady, a relative of my father. It was at this time that I lived in what we term the 'harem lek.' The 'harem lek' is not the personal harem of the sultan, but a sumptuous and beautiful place where different families each had their own apartments. Here I was brought up, not in the Mohammedan, but in the Catholic faith. And it was here, before I reached the age of 14, that the lady in whose charge I was, tried her hardest to make me marry a rich nobleman who had fallen in love with me. His name? That I must not tell you, but he was very rich indeed, as wealthy as any man in Turkey, I have been told.

"But I was always unconventional and the idea of marrying this man who was old enough almost to be my grandfather at a time when I did not yet understand the significance of marriage was loathsome, and I refused.

"Previous to that I had had an interesting time in the harem. We were fortunate in having many foreign governesses and it was from them that I learned so many languages. With my French governess I often visited the opera. It fascinated me and I determined to go on the stage as soon as I was old enough. Even then I was always singing and gave several concerts in the palace. At this time the convertions for Turkish women were still very strict and though I was allowed piano lessons instructions in singing was forbidden to me.

During all this time more and more pressure was being brought to bear upon me with the object of inducing me to marry the old nobleman, and realising that I should be forced into this marriage if I remianed in the harem, I decided to escape. One day when the palace was 'en fete' and the governesses and guards were less watchful than usual, I contrived to slip out without being noticed, and found my way to the house of an aunt of mine whom I knew was going to Bulgaria. Her husband was Austrian consul in Sofia. I begged my aunt to take me with her. She consented and the end was that I accompanied her and lived in Sofia for more than a year.

"I supposed that my elderly lover would give up after that, but I was mistaken. Only a few weeks after I left Constantinople I was playing in my aunt's garden when I saw an evil-looking face peering over the wall. I screamed, thinking it was a thief, but a neighbor said that she had seen two strangers lurking round the house for some days, and it was afterwards discovered that these men were agents of the Turkish nobleman who had sent them to kidnap me.

"It was in Sofia that I met my husband, M. Joseph Martin. He is French by parentage, but was born in Turkey and belongs to our diplomatic service. He is now again in Sofia and with him is our little 9-year-old boy. We fell in love with each other, were married, and, returning to Constantinople, lived very happily together in our little villa.

"NEARLY three years went by and I had almost forgotten the rich old man who had wanted me for his wife. Then one day an old woman came to my door and showed me the most beautiful specimens of lace. It is quite the custom in Turkey for women to make house-to-

And They Keep on Monkeying With Evolution

Idea That Once Upon a Time Man Was Rope-Tailed Inhabitant of Tree Tops Didn't Originate With Darwin.

By Edwin G. Pierce

WHAT'S all this ruction about evolution? Are the monkeys preparing to sue for slander? If so, they are somewhat premature, for it does seem like folks nowadays are bending all their energies toward getting back to the primitive state; so we thought the score was tied in the ninth and the game called on account of darkness until Mr. Bryan and the others insisted on taking the field again.

Seriously, since the question has again been opened, and while it is still legal to sit down and peacefully ponder upon the ultimate whyness of this, that, and the other things, let's get a comprehensive view of the facts and present status of the theory of evolution.

This much debated idea did not originate with Darwin. Even primitive and savage races have given thoughtful care to the selection and breeding of their domestic animals and, of course, the Greeks thought of evolution long ago. Really, for supremacy in the matter of thinking up new stuff, it is necessary to crown the brow of the Greeks with the sweet scented garlic—pardon, we meant garland. No idea so modern that was not old stuff to the Greeks, frinstance many Ohioans fondly suppose that Mark Hanna originated the republican form of government, but not so, in fact, not a tall. Plato had it all doped out before the Christian era.

AND so with evolution; Theognis, Aeschylus, Empedocles, Democritus, Epicurus and Aristotle, all had their ideas on the subject. Lucretius, a Roman educated at Athens, repeats the Greek legendary conception of evolution in his wonderful poem, "De Rerum Natura," published about 45 B. C.

In the sixteenth century, when men were making their first voyages of exploration to the new continents, the similarity of certain apes to the human form began to be noticed.

Buffon, a French naturalist, established the fact that man is certainly an animal belonging to the mammalian class, and though he refrained from saying so directly, he evidently believed that men and apes came from common ancestors.

The German poet, Goethe, tinkered with the idea and Erasmus Darwin, grandfather of the great naturalist, proposed an evolutionary idea as early as 1794.

Lamarck in 1809 published a definite statement that man is descended from the apes and announced a theory of evolution by adaptation which has since been revived.

Malthus in 1826 advanced the idea that has come down to us as the Survival of the Fittest, viz., that oversupply of population produces a struggle for existence, and those best fitted for this struggle survive.

About 1822-33 the remains of ancient cavemen began to be found in France and Belgium, and in 1848 Lieutenant Flint found upon the north face of the Rock of Gibraltar a skull which was seen to differ greatly from the skulls of modern men. And in 1856, in a cave overlooking the Duessel river at a place called Neanderthal, a skull and other remains of a race of men not entirely extinct, were discovered.

THEN came the real doctrine of evolution. In 1858 Charles Darwin published a book called "The Origin of Species," in which he takes facts about the lower forms of life and reasons from them in a logical manner to the conclusions which now go under his name.

The book stirred up a great deal of discussion, but the real explosion came in 1874, when Darwin published his second book called "The Descent of Man," in which he showed the various similarities of man not only to the monkeys, but to the mammals, such as dogs and seals. They have similar bones, muscles, nerves, blood and brain, are subject to the same parasites and diseases and even act alike when drunk and afterward. There are in man certain rudimentary muscles and structures, now nearly lost by disuse, that are essentially the same as corresponding, but well developed parts of the lower mammals. The spinal cord in man has a thread-like appendage that may be the remnant of a tail. The sense of smell in primitive peoples approaches in keenness that of the lower animals. Our wisdom teeth are tending to become obsolete Primitive man had a hairy coat, but lost it by the continued use of artificial covering.

NATURALLY, these revolutionary ideas drew storms of protest from church and clergy, but Darwin and his firey defender, Thomas Huxley, turned loose such an overwhelming array of facts that they had actually shifted the burden of proof to their opponents in advance, and as the clergy had no facts, public opinion went strongly in favor of evolution.

As usual with new ideas, the thing was greatly overdone by zealous adherents especially writers of sensational fiction, nature fakers and the like, but in recent years the pendulum has been swinging the other way. Most scientists accept the general idea of evolution, but do not consider that of itself and alone it offers a complete explanation of the origin of man. In the minds of most people, we believe, there is at least a latent notion that there is no need of conflict between science and religion in this matter unless one insists upon a rock-ribbed word-for-word interpretation of the King James version of the Bible.

Eugene Dubois, a Dutch army surgeon, was excavating for fossils along the Bengawan river in central Java near the town of Trinil when he came upon a skull, tooth and thigh bone, evidently human, but of great antiquity. He published in 1894 a paper in which he claimed that these bones were those of an ape-man which he called Pithecanthropus Erectus, or Trinil man, who was the ancestor of modern man.

It must be stated, however, that it is not certain these three bones belong together, but the evidence of the skull itself cannot be denied. However, proof is not yet established by one piece of evidence and no other member of this race has yet been identified.

THIS leads us to consider just how this sort of evidence is developed. When, a man of science comes upon a moss-covered brain basket he does not begin to soliloquise in sepulchral tones "Alas! poor Yorick, I knew him well," but, more politely waits till he is really acquainted. He cherishes the gruesome remnant as the apple of his eye, retires to his laboratory and measures hither and yon with great exactness.

In 1907 Schoetensack found in a sand pit near Heidelberg, Germany, a jaw-bone containing a full set of human teeth. From this small beginning he visualized a character of remote times which has become known as the Heidelberg man. From the fact that only his jaw remains that part was evidently highly developed and perhaps he was a member of the original Heidelberg chorus. But, be that as it was, and with proper respect for the wonders of science, a jaw-bone is rather an uncertain foundation for a whole man. True enough, the jaw-bone is a mighty instrument. Sampson demonstrated what can be done with it, and he has had many imitators; but for all that, we are not so sure about the Heidelberg man and his family tree.

Another of these shady characters of dim antiquity is the Piltdown man, so named because he carelessly left portions of his skull at Piltdown, England.

The greatest objection to these three types is that only one of each has been found, and yet a skull's a skull and somebody must have worn it.

ALTHOUGH we are not entirely sure of the existence and characteristics of people like the Trinil, Heidelberg and Piltdown men, there was a race of apelike people of whose existence we have unmistakable evidence. Some twenty partial and a few complete skeletons have been found which show the same characteristics as the one found at Neanderthal. Flint implements and crude weapons found with the skeletons tell a fairly complete story of how they lived, and the geological formations in which they were found tell when they lived. No fair-minded person can doubt this collection of evidence.

Here is the most generally accepted portrait of the Neanderthal man, the more or less human being who roamed central Europe a few thousand years ago. He was short, powerful, and an ugly customer

As restored by the method already described, the Neanderthal man was about five feet four inches tall, with a very large head on a short, thick, hairy body. Shoulders were broad and stooping, head and neck bent forward, forearms much shorter relative to the upper arm than in any modern race of people. Knees were habitually bent forward without power of straightening the joint or of standing erect. These men had a shuffling gait and habitually resorted to a squatting position, and in general were rather ugly looking specimens. They roamed the fields of middle Europe and France for thousands of years, undergoing some evolution from lower to higher types, until they were entirely displaced by a race of greater intelligence, skill and size. Although some prize fighters and baseball players have one back to the crouching habit, there is no other evidence of the direct survival in any modern people of the Neanderthal type.

Returning to modern times, one Lartet, in 1868, explored a cave in the little French town of Cro-Magnon and found five skeletons, flint implements, perforated shells, etc., belonging to the human race of a high order. This Cro-Magnon race, of which some thirty-five skeletons have now been found, evidently came into Europe and drove out the Neanderthals, being possessed of more effective weapons. They were skilled in tool making and had well developed arts, as can still be seen in their paintings and drawings on the cavern walls.

In Europe, at least, these primitive people were followed by many special groups, such as lake dwellers, cliff dwellers and others whose history and racial characteristics gradually merge into the traditions of historic peoples.

SUCH are the outstanding facts that have developed since Darwin. We have also Mendel's law of heredity, the biographical researches of Jacques Loeb, and a much greater knowledge of the effect of natural conditions and forces such as relative humidity and temperature change upon man. Modified theories of evolution have also been proposed.

As to the monkeys, it is not at all necessary to the theory of evolution that we should claim or establish such relationship. The chain of evidence from the primitive Neanderthals to modern men is sufficient to establish the main idea of evolution, which is that man can change from a lower to a higher plane of existence.

We are, to some extent, masters of our own destiny, not only as a race, but as individuals. Each human life is a miniature evolution. We begin as an embryo that seems exactly similar to that of all the other mammals and pass through a marvelous development into a being of vastly superior abilities, although we are still mammals.

Since it is possible to change, we can look behind us and see that the lower was a less desirable state of existence than our own, and, therefore, conclude that it is worth while to strive for self-improvement that we may rise to the enjoyment of a larger and finer life than we now have.

ONE of the greatest developments man has made is in the capacity for profiting by experience, and, as men and nations have followed the best traditions of their race and struggled forward, they have advanced in the scale of evolution, but just as soon as they have reached a measure of success and relief from the necessity of struggle, they have quickly degenerated. As soon as a majority of the people turn from wisdom to folly that nation is already going down. It's a long way up the hill of evolution, but a short jump down. Facilis Discensus Averni—it's easy to go to hell—was the wise saying of an old Roman, and he ought to know. So it was with the Egyptians, Greeks, Romans and some others we might mention. When, we develop a race that can retain sanity and wisdom in prosperity as in adversity they will be supermen.

Applying some of these ideas to ourselves, it may occur to thinking people that in our smug indifference to the increase of crime, law-breaking and insanity, our idealizing of folly, our low standards of amusements, our lack of moral training, and in other ways that readily come to mind, it might be that we Americans are monkeying dangerously with evolution.

The Battle of Languages at Paris in 1919

By Ray Stannard Baker

Designated for the Work by the Former President.

CHAPTER XIX.

"IS NOT the return to the past," asks Clemenceau, "the first impulse of countries whose power is founded upon the force of tradition?"

It was the French who were the great defenders of the old practices of European statecraft; and it was America chiefly that demanded change and sought new methods to meet new realities.

While the problems of procedure were before the conference, an impassioned argument took place regarding the choice of an official language for the treaty. The predominance of their language in diplomacy has ever been a mark of power upon which the French have set great store, and this was a battle royal between French and English.

This discussion of January 15 is at once so symbolical of the rise of a new influence in the world and in itself so typical of the give and take of the secret councils at Paris, that it is here set down complete. They were discussing Section 8 of the proposed French plan of procedure in which French was made the official language for the treaty:

M. PICHON pointed out that French has invariably been used as the language for the standard texts of treaties. The proposal that French be the official language did not mean that delegates should not have the right to use their own language. The particular reason for having one language as the official language is that there may be assured but one document containing the standard text. There has been no exception to the use of French for that purpose. M. Pichon referred particularly to the last conference at The Hague. Moreover, this requirement would not affect the right of delegates to use their own language, such as English, which has the widest circulation in the world.

MR. LLOYD GEORGE observed that he was very sorry not to be able to accept the text proposed for this section. He wished to say that it was not a matter of prejudice, but for the first time we now had the case of the United States taking part in a European peace and this made, with the British empire, a majority of the associated governments having English as their official language. He thought M. Pichon's point about a single document a good one, but it was interesting to recall that both English and Dutch are used side by side in South Africa, and English and French in Canada. In both countries all documents are published in both languages, and both hold. This is more important that in the case of treaties, where differences arise on questions of principle, rather than shades of meaning. In these instances, questions come up in connection with the interpretation of legal documents, and he knew of no case where any difficulty had arisen. Consequently, inasmuch as the majority of the alliance use the English language, he proposed an amendment to Section VIII., making English an offical language of the conference.

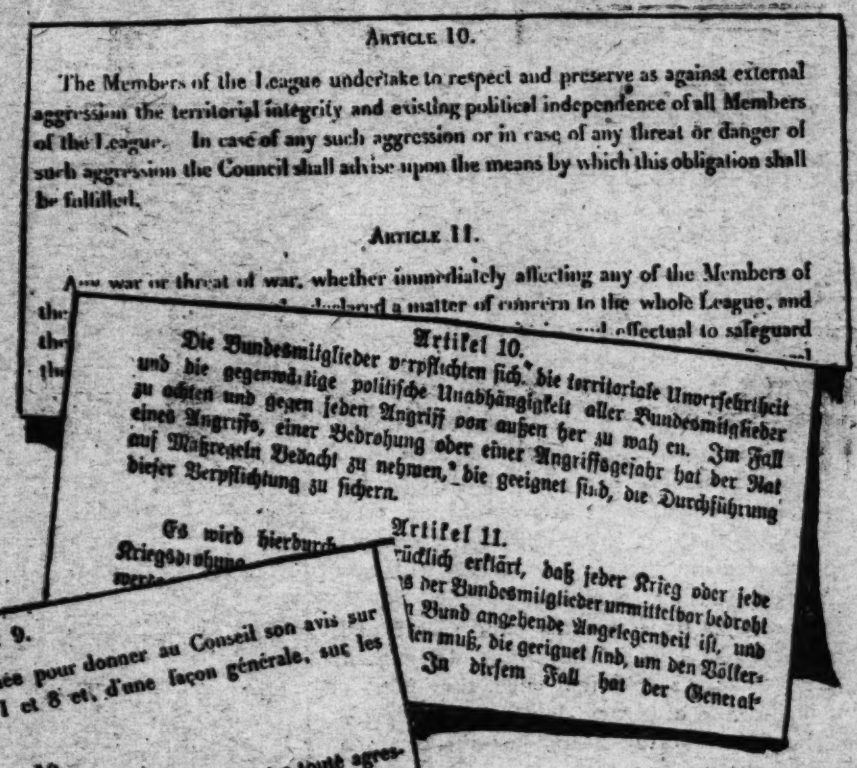

M. SONNINO stated that he preferred that one language be used, for if two languages were chosen, the Italian language would appear to be placed in an inferior position.

MR. WILSON observed that all recognized the historical claim for French to be made the official language, but there were some circumstances which he believed should not be overlooked. For instance, the official language of the east is English, and diplomatic documents are in that language. This is not a matter of discrimination, as M. Sonnino has said, but a matter of generality of use. It seemed to him that a language which is the official language of the greatr part of the world should be the official language of the conference. He did not, however, propose that French be excluded. He only asked that it be considered in a preferential manner, as compared with Italian.

M. PICHON referred to the fact that the resolutions of the Versailles conference were in French.

M. CLEMENCEAU admitted that he was considerably embarassed. He saw the justice of the claim that the English language was the language most commonly spoken throughout the world, and that it has carried civilisation and liberal institutions wherever it has penetrated, but he would point out that French has taken the place of Latin, which, in its time, was the official language of the world, and, moreover, it has the advantage of extreme precision. Nevertheless, he had the greatest desire to give each language its full right. Consequently, if English is admitted, it would not be right to exclude Italian.

He therfore proposed that there should be three official languages, and if a question of interception should ever arise the French text would rule.

MR. LLOYD GEORGE observed that this would make French the official language, or, as Mr. Wilson suggested, the standard language.

MR. WILSON inquired whether the official minutes would then be kept in all three languages.

MR. BALFOUR requested that M. Clemenceau be good enough to submit his proposal in writing, so that he might see the actual wording of the clause, and that this should be presented for considertaion at the afternoon meeting.

The conversations were resumed at 2:30 P. M.

M. PICHON submitted a new text for Article VIII., proposed by M. Clemenceau. (English, French and Italian to be the official languages—French the standard text.)

MR. WILSON asked permission to present the following aspects of the matter: French has been the language of European diplomacy, but we have now reached the beginning of a new era and enter upon world diplomacy. It is hardly decisive to follow European precdence which gives the French language this position. The language of the other side of the globe is English, and this is a congress of the world. Moreover, the greater part of the people represented in this congress use the English language. He sincerely doubted whether any American when looking at this document in French would be satisfied that it was an exact expression of the decision of the conference.

As regards the arguments for the Italian language, he would venture to point out that it was spoken by a limited part of what might be called the constituency of the conference.

If English and French were placed on a parity there would be a perfect concurrence of mind of those who understood the French version with those who used the English version.

MR. WILSON also pointed out that it was proposed to have a permanent secretariat for the conference, and this was one more reason why the documents of this secretariat should be in both languages. Moreover, should another minority language be admitted, others would have to be included also.

He ventured again to lay stress upon the fact that a new element has been introduced in the diplomacy of the world by the entrance of a new power speaking English. For these reasons, he urged that both English and French be made the official languages of the conference.

MR. LLOYD GEORGE submitted a proposal providing for the use of French and English as the official languages of the conference, and for the reference to the league of nations for decision of any question of interpretation that may arise.

M. PICHON remarked that this was not the first time that the United States and other states of both North and South America had adoped French as the official language. He referred to the conferences at The Hague where, according to precedent, French had been adopted as the official language by all those present.

In answer to the contention that The Hague conferences had served no purpose and had been disregarded, M. Pichon replied that it was not the fault of France that this had occurred.

In conclusion he referred to President Wilson's statement that France in this matter had a historical privilege. He believed that President Wilson would be the last not to recognize that privilege. In view of what France had gone through, and in view of all her sufferings, he thought it strange that the first act of this conference should be to withdraw from her that right. He pointed out that M. Clemenceau had suggested a formula which seemed to meet the desires of the president, and still left France her privilege.

M. SONNINO pointed out that while it was true that Italy had not a majority of population, nevertheless it should not be forgotten that she had contributed her full share to the war, and had put into the field from four to five million soldiers. He repeated that if an exception were to be made to the historical rule and Italy were left out it would be a distinct slight against her. He wished to support M. Clemenceau's proposal. MR. WILSON spoke as follows:

"My sentiments would respond at once to M. Pichon's appeal—not only my own, but also those of all the people of the United States—but I felt obliged to leave sentiment out by views of practical effects. The look of this conference is to the future. We are trying to draw now together to do away with contest. These documents which we are to draw up and sign will be the basis and life of governments all over the world. The interpretation of them will affect situations which are to come, and in such interpretations a preponderance of the peoples of the world will use the English text. I cannot refrain from reminding myself that we are engaged in a practical business, and I am bound to lay matters of precedent aside. What will be the languages, in time to come, which will be easiest to interpret? French and English. The world will find it easier to interpret French and English texts, far easier than any other. Let me say that it is not in my heart to show disrespect. Let us so act that the future generations will say: 'These men had hard common sense, and put practical interests to the front.'"

After some general discussion the chairman read the text of Article VIII., and put the question as to whether it was approved. He referred to the fact that French had been the official language of the Versailles conference of the inter-allied high commission.

MR. LLOYD GEORGE observed that when the commission sat in London, English had been the official text. He reverted again to his former argument that English was the official language of a great section of the world. He laid stress on the point that the forthcoming conference was to lay out a new era, and inasmuch as it was now necessary to deal with realities, he gave his support to President Wilson's appeal, although he found it most difficult to resist the appeal of the minister for foreign affairs.

M. CLEMENCEAU believed that those present were more in accord than it appeared. Mr. Wilson had mentioned the part taken in the war by English-speaking people. This is true. He frankly recognized the debt which France owed to the men who speak English. Like Mr. Wilson, he was ready to face new problems. It was not only necessary to try, but also to succeed. This war, however, took place in France. It should not be forgotten that his proposal was that the official text shall be English, French and Italian, and he, a Frenchman, had proposed it. If it was now argued that the English-speaking people must be able to read the text, he admitted it, and has proposed English, French and Italian. The mere fact that a small text is hidden away in the archives at The Hague will not make any difference if it is in the French language. As regards Italian I believe that not only now, but in the future, it will be necessary to have many more officially stamped texts, but from the merely practical point of view there should be but one text in the hands of the judge. There should be but one standard to refer to.

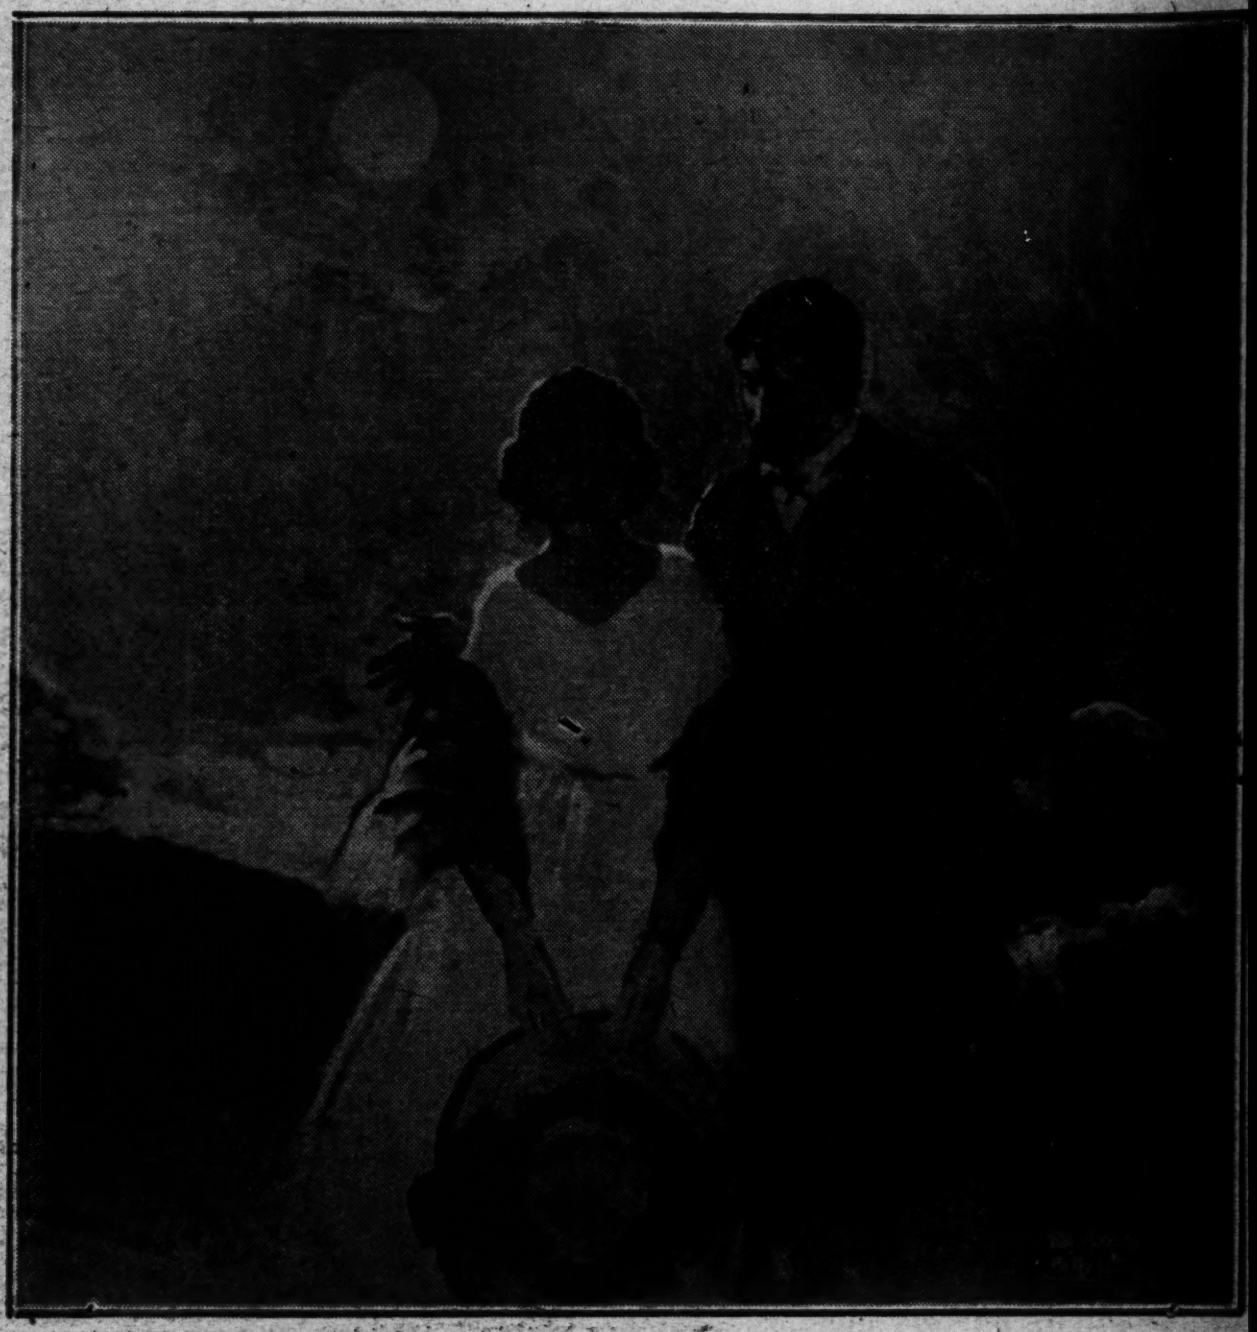

MR. LLOYD GEORGE observed that the question now under consideration was whether there shall be but one text, not two or three. If the French text is the standard for scrutinization, the British delegate would have to examine it very carefully. Why would it not be well to have two or three official languages, and if there is a dispute, instead of referring it to a text, why not leave it to the league to decide? In Canada, if the judge says that the texts are different the matter is referred to parliament. Such cases will undoubtedly arise, and it would be appropriate and preferable to have the matter referred to the league rather than to a text. Why could not the French language, so to speak, serve for all Latin peoples, and the English text represent the others? He suggested, therefore, that it would be better to proceed to the consideration of the amendment first proposed, that is to say, that there be two official texts, English and French. If that be accepted, Baron Sonnino's proposal might then be taken into consideration.

MR. WILSON thought it of interest to remind those present that in treaties between the United States and France the text is in English and French. The senate of the United States approves the English text. Therefore, so far as the United States is concerned,

The Devil's Hunting Horn

"Them That Be So Mighty Fond Of Explaining Everything or Earth May Find Themselves Explained Out of Heaven One Of These Days."

"Have you ever faced the tower after dark?" Henry asked, and Jemima said she never had.

THERE'S a lot more stories told of two men and one woman than you'll find about two women and one man; but that's only because women be cleverer to hide their secrets than we are, though, if the truth was known, there's just as many adventures in man hunting as woman hunting. Only the females keep their mouths shut closer and don't shout so loud when they bring down their prey, nor yet make such a fuss when they fail.

But in the case of Henry, Jacob and Jemima—called "Jem" for shortness—'tis just the common situation of two men after one girl, only thanks to the Devil's Hunting Horn and certain other mighty queer features of their affair, the story be worth the telling. The men also made it a lot out of the common, for one was a churchman and a shining light, who done a power of good in his way, while the other belonged to the ancient order of anointed scamps that cause us moderate people to despair of human nature.

In another station of life no doubt Jacob Clegg might have passed to his grave as a respectable figure, for all he wanted was to be let alone to shoot and fish and play; but, not being born to that condition where shooting and fishing and playing is respectable, Jacob was a failure. The difference between him and Squire Buller amounted just to that. Squire inherited his land and fur and feathers, and he could devote his days to slaughter and games without a disrespectful word from anybody; while Jacob, being a wood cutter's child, who'd lost his father at six years old, had no sort of right to birds and beasts and fishes, or, in fact, to anything but work. Yet his nature craved to be hunting before all else; and so it comed about that he was a baggering young poacher, with no friends but his mother, though it was well known he had a good brain and could stand to work as well as anybody when he pleased to do so.

BY TRADE he was a thatcher—a very skilful man—and it was well in his power to be a respectable character and a credit to the parish if he chose. But he didn't choose, and he'd been locked up more'n once and done a good few things to make his mother weep and the godly sigh. And I'm sure that nobody sighed oftener than Henry Bird. Indeed, he had tried once or twice to win over Jacob to righteousness and plain dealing, but so far couldn't point to no success.

"If ever I'm reformed," said Jacob, "twill be by a chap from the Establishment, because I haven't got no use for psalm smiting dissenters, and least of all for you, Henry. You're a fiddle faced fool in my opinion, and you're only so amazing good because you haven't got the pluck and spirit to be anything else." So spoke Jacob, and the good man replied.

"The Lord forgive you for that speech as readily as I do," answered Henry, because he always offered the left cheek if anybody smote him on the right. And yet there was secrets hid in him as nobody guessed at, and the first thing that showed he was only human, after all, happened in the matter of Jemima Mason.

In a word, Henry fell in love with her, much to the surprise of a good few maidens of his own persuasion, who listened to him like lambs and who thought, of course, he'd take one of them when the time came. But Jemima was Church of England, and yet he fell in love with her most furious and made the running in a very manly way at first. She weren't a beauty, but she had a lot of sense for twenty-five and she was independent, having a clear fifty pound a year left her by her grandfather, who knew her worth. Her parents were dead and she lived with a woman cousin—a widow a good bit older than herself—in that nice double cottage just outside Thorpe.

She did needlework and made a useful bit of money by it, and she kept herself to herself and was well thought upon for a sensible and self-respecting creature. She had a mind, too, and a good education. She must needs even go to a town now and again, and she'd often leave home and put in a week all on her own, at Exeter or Plymouth, just to keep in touch with things and rub off the rust of the country. Out of the common, you may say, and Thorpe was proud of her and hoped she'd take Henry Bird as being the young man among us most worthy of such a sensible maiden.

AND now I'll just name the Devil's Hunting Horn and then we'll get going. It weren't a public house, as you might think, but a lone tower, built a hundred years before this tale, by the Squire Buller of them days, at the time we were fighting the French. He lifted it in the midst of Thorpe Woods, and why he done so his descendants may know, but nobody else ever did. A gamekeeper lived there for a bit, but it had been empty for more than half a century, I dare say, and it got its name from a curious fact, because, often and often, there came a strange and wisht sound from the tower—a noise between a bittern booming and a hunter's horn heard far away. 'Twas an unnatural and creepy note, and not a man, woman or child at Thorpe but had often heard it.

Some said that there was a sort of a natural trumpet in the stone work—a rift through which the wind blew when it was southwest, and made the noise; but for my part I don't like to hear every strange affair explained away in the modern fashion, and I steadfastly believe that all sorts of dark and deep things happen round about us far beyond the power of human wits to understand. 'Twas not accident that made that fearsome and creepy sound; the reason was hid with Providence, and, as I tell the young folk, them that be so mighty fond of explaining everything on earth may find themselves explained out of heaven one of these days. 'Tis a faithless generation; and so sure as God's alive, a lot of us will be called to pay an ugly price for our unbelief when our turn comes.

THE Devil's Hunting Horn stood in the very thick of the woods on top of Thorpe Knoll, yet not much above a mile from the highroad. It was a four-square tower, stained and time bitten, gray and yellow and moldering, with ivy-tods hanging from the window holes and ferns fastened in the rotting mortar—the home of bat and owl—its plaster fallen in the little chambers and even the flat roof up on top scattered to shivers at one angle, where the lightning struck some time before living memory. And you can still see the great rusty nail where the Dark Hunter was said to hang his horn. Then of winter nights he'd blow it, and the hounds of the air would come out of the storm, to do his wicked will and harry poor, naked, human souls.

A fearsome place in a narrow clearing, with pines towering round about and a straggle of thorn and laurel and sapling rowans in the undergrowth. And of a moony night, if any had the pluck to go there, they'd see the tower rising up like a white ghost in the midst of the black forest. And some had heard strange noises within at such times—noises half man, half beast—and laughter that made 'em go goose flesh; and Dicky Tremlett lost the little mind he had to lose after being night foundered up there; and it was there also that the baker from Pogley hanged hisself for love and was found in a lower chamber hitched to a hook, with his tongue out of his mouth, so dead as a nit. And a wise one or two even said the bit of rope round his neck were never twisted by mortal hands.

Among the young men in my youth 'twas thought a pretty plucky deed to go up over at midnight, when the horn was sounding, and a good few more vowed they had done so than ever did; but Henry Bird he feared no evil powers, being shod with the shoon of righteousness and girt with the shield of truth. He'd gone there more than once to show he was not afeared of the devil or his works; but he was young, and alas! he didn't know that when the Prince of Darkness can't get in by the front door he'll often try the back, and if that fails he'll force a window or even come down the chimney. For the house of the soul have plenty of weak spots, and nobody knows 'em better than the Enemy of Mankind.

Well, Henry he fell in love with Jemima and fate willed that the danger spot in the man should be touched by that innocent woman. He was a puzzling character without any doubt, and though nobody could ever say that he weren't an honest man, and didn't believe all he said, and didn't strive all he knew to show the light to others and gather straying sheep for the fold, yet, when his own cross came and his love wasn't returned, then his better nature failed him.

IT WAS the case of a man who had never been tempted before and never found life to thwart him and flout him, suddenly up against a crushing trial and a denial of his passion; and the blow made his honor and justice and humanity go down before the wind. For he was ever in extremes, no doubt, though he hadn't realized that, and the fervor and emotion and excitement he put into religion were all switched off into his love affair when it came. He took the matter to his Maker, you may be sure, and prayed that all would go right with the happiness and prosperity of such a righteous and faithful servant of the Lord as he was. But it didn't go right, and after walking with him and paying him every proper respect and attention, Jemima Mason convinced herself that he wasn't the man for her market. She liked a bit of the joy of life and told him so.

"Life with you would be one long Sunday, Mr. Bird," she said. "I admire you something tremendous, and I'm sure there never was such another; but I couldn't live up to it—not all the week; and, whether or no, I don't love you. If I did the rest would come easy for certain. But love is the needful thing."

He didn't take "no" for an answer very easy, howeaer. Life had gone smooth with him and his goodness been repaid with prosperity, so he wasn't at all used to disappointment and quite unprepared to be denied in this great matter of a wife. Jemima seemed a proper masterpiece to him, not fine enough to tempt the lust of the eye, but as sensible as she was homely, and just the sort of young woman to be the mother for a nice lot of little Birds presently. So he stuck to her dogged and made a hole in his manners before long, for after she'd turned him down half a dozen times he began to suffer a new sensation and get a bit wild and fall away from his own high standards. The devil was feeling for the weak spot, you see, and, according to his fatal custom, he very soon found it. Time passed and bad things began to happen in the soul of Henry.

THEN came a curious chance about a year after Jemima's first refusal of the man, and, little knowing that love can turn to poison and be a deadly danger to some natures, Jemima played into his hands on a certain winter night. She thought he was over his sorrows and content to be just a friend, like other men, and after he shut down on lovemaking she was content to see him and pass the time of day with him and even offer him a cup of tea if he happened along at the proper hour. Then she ordained to go to Plymouth for one of her visits to do a bit of shopping and see the world. For she was very independent and liked to show the people that she weren't a stay-at-home.

And the train went off a bit afore midnight, hearing which Henry offered to see her to it. Thinking no evil and little knowing he was a man possessed, she agreed, and the night came—full moon with a scud flying and mild as milk. He was early but found her ready, and he suggested a stroll first, as he was wishful to get her to do a few things for him in town. So guessing nought was wrong, she set off and he carried her little cane hold-all for her.

"We'll go up the hill," he said, "for I'm short of exercise, and along by the Thorpe Wood we shan't run across anybody."

They walked up to the forest, she thinking to drop down the other side to the station; and Henry pretended to be bright and cheerful and hoped she'd have a good time away.

"What a one for mystery you are!" he said. "Your cousin tells me you never even let anybody know where you put up at Plymouth."

"I like to be free," she answered. "'Tis my little bit of fun for the year."

"You'll go to worship on Sunday, I hope," he said, for even then, with satan working double tides in his heart, he had to be his pious self.

"Yes," she answered. "I go where they sing fine anthems—to St. Andrew's parish church."

THEY went along and then, mournful and steady, the Devil's Hunting Horn sounded through the woods; but Henry already knew it was blowing that night.

"Have you ever faced the tower after dark?" he asked, and Jemima said she never had.

"Now's a good opportunity, then," he told her, "and I dare say you'll be the first woman in Thorpe to say you have. It will be a good example and show the maidens they must not be superstitious."

"I don't fear it, because I know there's nothing there for an honest girl to fear," she answered.

So they strolled into the fir trees and soon stood under the tower rising above 'em with the horn shouting its melancholy note aloft.

"We'll go in and climb the stone steps and look at the moon—there's plenty of time," he tells her, and rather enjoying the adventure, Jem followed him.

There was a heavy oak door at the bottom, that most time hung open on the rusty hinges. They climbed the steps and got up on the flat roof, and then Henry's manner changed and something of the hungry devil inside the man broke out of his eyes and voice.

"Tell me this," he said, "and tell me true. Is there anybody else coming between us? Is there another man you love, Jem? I've a right to know that, and I'm going to know."

She was frightened, but didn't show it. She looked away out over the tree tops and heard the horn humming under her feet, and replied very quietly and truly:

"No, Henry. There's no man in my life."

With that he went at her like a flame of fire, implored her to take him, and knelt to her, touched the hem of her garments and showed her in half a minute he was beside himself.

But she kept her nerve and prayed to God in her heart, and told Henry that she could never take him and begged him to remember his manhood and let her be. Then he broke loose and cursed her for a hard-hearted giglet who had ruined his life; and she saw his love turned to bitter hate, and feared every minute he'd seize her and fling her down and break her neck. She implored him for his religion to keep a tight hold on himself, but he was raging mad now and he told her that if she didn't promise to take him he'd hawk her up in the tower and leave her there to die.

"None comes here once in a month, as you know," he said, "and here you'll starve and rot and nobody be the wiser, for they'll look for you in Plymouth; and God judge me, when once I leave you if ever I'll come back."

She prayed him not to damn his soul with such wickedness and asked him how he would gain by putting her to a cruel death, but he said her doom was on her own head, and she saw he was far past reason. Then she knelt to him in her turn and implored him not to do such an awful thing.

WITH that he threw her on the stones and rushed down the steps, and she heard him put home the great door and heave timber up against it from a wood stack and make it fast against her. He worked for half an hour without a word, and she screamed thrice so loud as she might, but there was only him to hear her, and for answer came the whistle of the train a mile away in the valley. Then he shook his fist up at her and ran off and was lost in the darkness.

He crashed away, like a wild creature, and the Devil's Horn seemed to blow a blast of triumph, but Jemima didn't hear it, because she fainted after Henry was gone. But her worst horrow that night had yet to come.

For the Lord chooses His own tools, and He picked a rough one for a rough task. Her cry, that might have gone out to the wind most times, had catched a human ear after all, and Jacob Clegg, very busy with the squire's pheasants not half a mile from the tower, had heard it. He knowed what it was, too, and being pretty much of a man for all his wickedness, reckoned there was a female in trouble calling for succor. So he hid his birds and his air gun where none could find 'em but himself, and slouched off so fast as he might through the game covers till he peeped out at the edge of the moonlit clearing. And then he saw—first, Jemima up in the tower, and second, Master Henry heaving a lot of heavy stuff against the door beneath. He marked the man, but he had the caution proper to chaps that play his nightly games, so he kept hid and watched a bit. And he didn't creep out till Henry was off.

SO IT happened that just as Jemima was recovering from her faint and pulling herself together up above, she heard footsteps ascending to her again, and as she had seen the blackguard go after he'd made her fast, all she knew was that some other creature must be alone in the tower with her. And then her heart failed indeed, for she reckoned that it couldn't be anybody much less this time than the Demon Hunter himself. She couldn't scream, though she tried, and her terror made her faint off once more; so when Jacob, who had got the door free, climbed up to see who it was fastened in by the villain he came across the poor girl lying flat on her back and dead to the world.

And then he picked her up and carried her down below.

"Don't be afraid no more, miss," he said, when she'd got back a little of her scattered wits. "'Tis Jacob Clegg, with no intention but to save you from that limt of the devil. I heard you holler, where I was to work half a mile away, and came along just in time to see Henry Bird take his hook after he'd made the door fast on you. And you be Miss Jemima Mason, by the look of it."

The blessed fact that she was safe very near made the poor girl go light-headed but she soon pulled herself together and knowing Jacob by sight, thanked him with all her heart for saving her under the grace of God. She didn't hide nothing, either, but told the whole fearful story, and Jacob got so mad that at first he wanted to run after the other man instanter and catch him afore he fetched home. But presently the poacher's natural craft got the better of his anger, and he thought if something a lot cleverer than that. And Jemima, who was properly indignant by now at the shameful treatment she'd been called to suffer, and so weak as a worm in body and mind after her cruel handling, fell in with Jacob's idea. She regretted agreeing with him a few hours afterwards, but then it was too late, for more strange things than one happened inside the next week.

Jacob was the sort that loved a little plot and very quickly made one, for when Jemima had thanked him yet again for saving her life and told him all that had happened, he thought over it and then planned what she should do.

"Tonight," he said, "you shall come and put up along with my mother, and tomorrow morning at cock-light I'll drive you down to Cornford to catch the train to Plymouth. You mustn't go from Thorpe, else you'll be seen. What we have got to do is to let that murderer think he's had his way. So you go and enjoy yourself at Plymouth, then come back to my mother, just for a night or two, and I'll tell you what to do next. The point is that nobody who cares about you is going to be frightened, and there won't be no hue and cry, because everybody will think you're all right. But the only hue and cry will be in the soul of Henry Bird, where the devil and all his angels will torture the traitor till he'll wish he'd never been born."

"He may repent tomorrow and come up and seek to save me," said Jemima.

"Not him. If you'd took him, he'd very like have done you in so soon as he was tired of you, same as he meant to do tonight," vowed Jacob. "He's a wolf in sheep's clothing and the awfulest hypocrite ever I heard tell about."

"But he's a religious man and he's done a power of good among the young people, and saved many from drink and foolishness," she said. "He's gone mad and that's the only right way to explain his outrage on me.

HOWEVER, Clegg wasn't there to argue. He fastened up the door again very careful, same as Henry had left it, and then he took Jemima's "hold-all" and very soon they was gone. He lived two miles away, in a cottage near North Mill, which belonged to his mother, and he bade the girl stop at a certain place while he slipped back and got his birds and air gun. Jemima was always calm and self-possessed, and when he joined her again she saw only too clearly what he'd been up to and was sorry.

"Oh, Mr. Clegg," she said. "I shall always feel very grateful and kind to you for this night's work, but I'm terrible ashamed that such a brave, fine chap should sink to that. I'm sure you be made of too good stuff to sink to such things."

He felt sheepish and cussed himself for showing her what he'd been up to.

"Lucky for you I was poaching anyhow," he said, "for if I hadn't been at Thorpe Woods you would still be jugged in the Devil's Hunting Horn, my dear woman. But don't you think I'm not very thankful I was there, for I very well know this is the best night's work I ever done in my life, and I shall be terrible proud of it to my dying day."

She liked his voice and she liked his looks as he marched her in and woke up his mother and made the old woman come down house and find some supper for Jemima.

Then Mrs. Clegg heard the awful news and was sworn to secrecy, and next morning Jacob fetched his pony along, just after dawn, and drove the girl to catch the first train to Plymouth from Cornford station, four miles down the line.

She promised to write and tell him where she was and she kept her word, and the moment he'd got her address, at a little inn own on the Barbican, where she was used to put up, if Jacob didn't travel down for a day and call in upon her and ax her to come and have a bit of dinner with him and so on.

SHE knew by now there was something drew her to him, and instead of being vexed at his cheek in coming to see her she felt quite pleased and must needs buy him a present, because, after all, a life is a life, and Jacob delicately reminded her over a veal cutlet that she'd be at her last gasp raw and dying with hunger in the Devil's Hunting Horn but for him.

"But for you and Providence," corrected Jemima.

"Providence first," he granted, "and I may tell you that this affair have made me take a much more serious view of Providence, Miss Mason. Because my mother has pointed out to me that the Lord chose a backslider like me to do this useful piece of work; and if the Lord haven't throwed me over, as everybody, including myself, imagined long ago, then there must be hope for me and a rare chance of making good. And I hope you'll help me to do so."

Well, when a handsome young man tells a woman he wants her help to make good 'tis any odds she'll feel a bit pleased at the prospect, and before Jacob went home that night Jemima found herself a good bit along the road to liking him. She brought him a tie pin in the shape of a little silver fox, costing six shillings, and she bought him a green silk tie also; and she made one solemn condition; that Jacob would come to church next Sunday; and he swore he would do so, and wear his fine adornments.

THEN he began about Henry Bird, for they'd been so interested in each other up to now that they almost forgot what had thrown 'em together.

Jemima saw Jacob to his train after they'd took a cup of tea, and it was fixed up that she'd come to his mother's cottage for a night on the way home in three days' time; and then he was going to tell her of the wonderful plot he'd hatched against the would-be murderer. She asked him if he'd seen Henry or heard aught of him since she left, and he said that he had not. But Jacob had took occasion to go up to the tower the day before he came to Plymouth to see if Henry had been there.

"The devil haven't stirred a finger to save you,' he explained. "I don't mean satan, but Henry Bird. The great logs are against the door, and no doubt he thinks you be dead and gone by now. But his turn will come next week, and I've got a very pretty clever thought upon the subject. And yet, God forgive me, I can't feel so righteous mad against him as I ought to feel."

"Why for not?" asked Jemima. "Be you such a Christian as all that?"

But Jacob explained.

"'Tis because if the wretch had never bawked 'e up there I should never have rescued 'e; and because if I hadn't done that I should have lost the bestest thing that ever happened in all my life."

And then the train went off afore she had time to answer him.

Well, Plymouth seemed a thought empty to Jemima Mason after Jacob had gone, and she asked herself what it was about the man had took her fancy, above the fact that he had saved her life; and she judged that it must be his voice and his cheerful nature. Besides he was terrible handsome, and though she knew handsome is as handsome does, her wits began to grow quick in the matter of young Clegg and she reckoned that, by nature, he was a nice minded and kind hearted creature and might very like turn from his doubtful, sporting ways and be a successful man in clever hands. At any rate, she dreamed a good few dreams about him, and, strange though it seemed even to herself, Jemima soon found a lot more interest in her heart for Jacob than bided there about the man who had tried to murder her. Her only kind thought and hope for Bird was that he'd gone daft and would be proved so

CLEGG was at the station to meet her with his trap when she came back and alighted at Cornford. Then he drove her home for that night and told her what a clever thing he'd hatched.

"As to Henry Bird's sentence, that's in your hands," he said, "but I've fixed up a very pretty trial for the blackguard, and

Spring Brings Urge to Make Self Over

Sometimes It Was Ambitions for a Gabled Stucco House, a Butler With an Accent, and a Sequin Gown Like an Onion Skin, Other Times It's Something Else, But Always It's the Resolution to Change the Old Order.

By Lauretta Joy

The year's at the spring
And day's at the morn;
Morning's at seven;
The hillside's dew-pearled;
The lark's on the wing;
The snail's on the thorn.

AND that outburst of little Pippa's spring ballad which has been outbursting for some eighty years, means that spring has come and that we all know it. Even if it's raining and the wind is howling when you read this, it's true. But if the sun looks down like a velvety gentian upon your new primrose or gold suit, with your spiffy new shoes and gloves and hat to match, and if you smell the maple buds and hear a bluebird or robin, and see some rainbow crocuses sprinkled over the soft lawns, there's no need to remind you of Pippa's little carol, for you're singing it yourself.

Somehow this springtide of the year with its golden daffies, rain drenched grass, trees all covered with misty, gauzy jade curtains, and chortling little children who skip rope, play marbles and fly their kites, acts like a gushing mountain torrent sweeping humanity, swishing and swashing over accumulated debris, and cleaning everything as spick and span as an energetic housewife.

This torrent might be called whetted desires. Folks begin to want things in the spring. Pop agrees. He has just had the bill for Mom's new brocaded satin dress and gray spats, and the other night he saw Miss Flapper Daughter meet her young man in some queer yellowish thing he'd never seen her in before, and he fears trouble from that quarter. That was the 15th and the bills don't come in until after the 1st. Mom agrees, too, for Pop has been coming home with seed packages—all kinds of them, colorful with sketchy cabbages as big as washtubs, hectic tomatoes that look like melons, and string beans that make the Jack and Beanstalk tale seem very probable. And Pop has developed a fondness for nuts and bolts, and screws, and chisels, and hose nozzles, and insect sprayers, and has cluttered up the cellar with his whatnots until Mom nearly breaks her neck every time she starts for her fruit stock. By the way, only three cans of peaches and one of strawberries are left.

But aside from the woman's new gown, the man's new contraptions, and the youngsters' clamorings of "Ma, gimme a penny!" springtide seems to bring desires not so tangible. There is a gush and a bubble and a craving for renewed interests in life; more fun; more work; more friendship; more hobbies; more everything.

In fact, folks just know that they want something to squeeze all that is squeezable out of these fresh months of the year, but just what that something is, they hardly know. They think that they want to go. They clean and polish up the family car, or possibly buy a new one on credit. They swing the machine into the long procession of others rich man's car and poor man's car, family car and only-for-two car, all cars racing with this seasonal search for something.

Or, mother may think that she wants company and invites the neighbors over for an evening; but after they've played a dozen hands or so and had pimento cheese sandwiches and coffee and have gone their separate ways, none of them is so sure that the evening was a howling success. Or, they may go fishing or join a married folks' dancing class, or hoe in the garden, or buy $10 tickets for an exclusive charity ball. Well, that's enough; just wanted to show you what various forms this cosmic urge takes.

And because of the tug of this cosmic urge, it's a mighty good plan for folks to get their balance before the urge strikes them full blast; a good plan to take inventory and try to really know what suits oneself.

The spring freshet with its awakening of wants and desires for new interests and its devastation of the mental winter debris is a blessing if guided into the right channels. And there are two channels for it. One might be summed as the channel that permits you to be your own normal, individual self. Study well the things you think you want and be sure that these things are for you. This channel is for folks who are content with themselves and who do not worry about being anything different. The other channel is for folks who are not content. They should select interests which will change them.

Mrs. Persnickerty is the sworn foe of dirt as her household knows too well

Let's look at a few of 'em.

Ma Barnes was happy until Ambition struck her full blast—not true Ambition, which is only another word for getting the most real things out of life, but that paste-jewel kind of ambition that wants gabled stucco houses and a butler with an accent, a maid with a lisp and false curls, a sequin evening gown like an onion skin, and a Louis-Quinze boudoir with an electric perfume burner.

Having noted that Ambition had Ma in tow, we reach the stage when Ambition has Ma down with his spurred heel on her. She is now named Momma Barnes, that is by all but the sheckel half of the household who oft forgets and calls her "Liz." Momma is trying her durndest to splurge like the ladies in the movies and she won't admit that she's not having a grand time doing it.

She has the sequin gown; she gives bridge parties with "the darlingest favors" and cut glass and plated silver prizes; her car is upholstered in gold brocade and smells of gardenia and violets; she has a weekly marcel (is thinking of getting a permanent); has her back pommelled and pomaded ever so often; tries this and that cream and brilliantine and perfume; has a greyhound and a gold-plated percolator, and that's that.

Momma Barnes sighs to the innermost depths of her much massaged being for the good old days of onion soup, geraniums and zenias, buttermilk and lemon juice beautifiers, little dabs of creamed chicken and asparagus for the sick neighbor, and weekly trips to the movie serial of "Her Daring Escapade."

Momma is feeling that Ma urge these spring days. But what would folks think if she lived as she was meant to live? Now if her innate bent of life was not along the right line it would be another thing. But who is there to say that the sequin gown life is on any higher scale than the bungalow apron one? Or the permanent wave existence any more uppetish than the rag curler one? Or the five-course meal any nearer happiness than the onion and potato soup one?

Will Momma take inventory before it's too late? Probably not.

On the other hand, we have Mrs. Persnitcherty, Dirt's Foe. I think that her real name is Mrs. Lucile Moon, age 38. Somehow it's difficult to imagine anyone named Lucile as the arch foe of fly specks and dust, but the parents of an angel child never know how said angel child will turn out. Now, when a swain does a-courting go he has so little opportunity to learn whether or not the darling of his heart is of that feminine genus who excavates dust where it is not and threatens divorce if the pipe misses the ash tray.

All of which accounts for the fact that this Lucile of our tale swapped the prefix Miss for Mrs. And the youth who gave her the title was one of those heroes of a novel, a dreamy youth trudging on through life seeing sunsets and the bronze throats of doves, and forgetting that soil is dirt and that the lot of woman is to wage war against this arch foe.

Unto this Lucile and the dreamy youth have been added one, two, three progeny, and sad is the lot of the wife and mother. Willie, the first born, has that annoying habit of not wiping his feet when he comes in from the street, which has just been torn up and is not immune from mother earth. Sammie, the second born, has a vulgar liking for mobs and insists upon hailing three or four of his fellows into the attic after school where they monkey with a radiophone and a miniature printing press. The second-born's father delights in these symptoms of an ingenious mind, but she who was misnamed Lucile is having a fearful time with her "nerves." Those boys, you see, pick up the rugs, and leave finger marks on the banisters and doors; and the second-born trails downstairs for cookies and gets crumbs all over the house. Then there's the last-born, a young daughter, who just won't tend herself to baby blue socks and white lace dresses with sashes to match. She's one of those wild little girls who like to make mud pies, and wade in the puddles after the rain, and then come inside with her muddy feet, and track all over the hardwood floors. Mother's just tired of it all—the house that won't stay clean; the children who are such a trial; and the husband who helps himself to the ice box cold pork and won't pick up his clothes.

Lucile Moon nags, and whines, and fusses, and has neurasthenic outbursts from morning to night. Her children regard her as sort of a harmless nuisance, a weak obstacle to be circumnavigated on the way to the cookie crock and up to the attic. Her naggiug qualities and the dislike they engender are so dominant that her children never consider the fact that she does keep the cookie jar full.

Mrs. Lucile Moon needs a different channel than Momma Barnes. The latter needs the channel of being her normal self. The former needs one that will remake her normal self into something more worth while—a something which sees that boys and girls and a smoothly running home are much worthier of time and energy and attention than dust specks and muddy tracks. The first are the ends of life; the latter, merely phases of existence.

Then we have Mr. Pa-Stick-in-the-Mud. He has another name, not nearly so descriptive. We first met him with his little lad of about 8 in a restaurant one night. The boy only acted natural, but all that Pa did all the time was to tell him to be still, and that he'd whale him good when he got home if he didn't keep still, and on, and on, and on. The other diners wished that Pa had been as slight a public annoyance as his son. This idea of being a blustering, brow-beating, grouchy authority who says "I'll fix you if you do this!" persisted through all of Pa's days of son-raising. Today he says that he's been a good father, but his children don't think more of him than of a dog, that even his wife cares only for what she can bleed him, that nobody'll care when he's gone, and a lot more of it. His children, now grown up, have advanced in interests way beyond father and he blames them for that. Time and again they have asked him to share their tickets to theater or concert, but Pa grouches out something very much to the point about "such fool running around." So they just leave him alone.

It's really quite a question as to whether the most turbulent spring freshet imaginable could do much for Pa. Some folks are made that way and can't help it. Before he's many years older, if he could see what an old pill he is, Pa Stick-in-the-Mud Grouch could get pulled out if provided with enough ropes and chains.

THE CONSTITUTION'S NOVEL-A-WEEK

The Heart of Canyon Pass ::

By Thomas K. Holmes

A Story of Rough Life in a Western Mining Town and What Happened When a Young Minister From The East Tried to Make Its People, Including a Pretty Cabaret Singer, Change Their Conduct and Ways of Living.

CHAPTER I.

THE bluebird was no harbinger of spring at Canyon pass. Most of the inhabitants had never seen that feathered songster and many had never heard of it. Incidentally they would not have known a harbinger in any case, presuming possibly that it was one of those new-fangled nipples for the hydraulic pipes at the Eureka washings, or something fancy that Bill Judson was selling in cans at the Three Star grocery. But spring had unmistakably arrived at Canyon pass when those two irrepressible pocket-hunters, Steve Siebert and Andy McCann, got together their frayed and rusty outfits and proceeded out of town, Steve making the ford through the east fork, while Andy plodded through the shallows of the west fork, both bound down the canyon for the desert country.

The day before had been pay day at the Eureka washings and the Oreode company's diggings and at most of the major mining prospects in the vicinity. At noon the miners and other workmen had knocked off work, drawn their pay, and, cleaned up and dressed in holiday attire, had sought the amusement places of the town. From dark till dawn they had as usual torn the town wide open like a paper sack, to quote Bill Judson, as he stood at daybreak in the doorway of his store and watched the two old desert rats going their several ways out of sight on either bank of Runaway river. "They've been doing this for twenty years," added Judson, pointing with his pipe stem to the disappearing prospectors. "An' to my knowledge and belief ain't neither of 'em struck a smell of paying color in all that time."

"That so?" returned Smithy, his gangling clerk. "What's the matter with them two old sourdoughs? All the time they was buyin' this stuff they never spoke a word to each other, and if one of 'em caught a look from t'other he snarled like a wild tagger!"

"Ain't spoke, to my knowledge," said the storekeeper, "Steve and Andy ain't, in twenty years. 'Fore that they was as thick as hasty puddin'. 'Twas right after the big slide. Steve and Andy was perky as blackbirds that spring. They hid out their camp somewhere near town that time. I always figgered they had a good prospect below there, in the canyon. 'Twas even reported that they took a sample of the right stuff to the assayer's office. But they was as close mouthed as twin clams. Then come the slide. Most of us that was yere then didn't think of much for a week or two but whether Canyon pass was goin' to be left on the map or not. Our stake was yere, and the slide acted like a stopper in Runaway river—like to plugged the old canyon for fair. Howsumever, when the channel was more or less clear again and we could come down off the roofs of our shacks, Steve and Andy showed up, but from different directions, as sore at each other as two carbuncles, and they ain't never been knowed to speak to one another since. Won't even drink at the same bar."

Down the street from the direction of the mining shafts sunk in the heights behind the town strode a well-proportioned young man more than six feet tall, with an air of frank assertiveness even in his carriage. Joe Hurley appeared to be amused as he came abreast of the Three Star grocery. But before he could utter a comment the storekeeper asked: "Wasn't you in the Grub Stake last night?"

Hurley wheeled to frown suddenly at Boss Tolley's gambling hall and cabaret almost directly across the street.

"Nell's got some new songs," went on Judson slyly. "Right cute they are. She certainly is some songbird, Joe. Dad burn it! She's too good for those roughnecks."

Hurley nodded slowly, and looked balefully at the Grub Stake, his face set grimly.

The Grub Stake was a sprawling, T-shaped structure with the long bar and gambling tables in the shank of the T, the dance hall and stage at the rear.

Dick Beckworth, otherwise known as Dick the Devil, who was Tolley's chief dealer at the tables of chance, rolled gracefully in the armchair at his empty table. From the dance hall into the barroom stepped suddenly an astonishingly brilliant figure. The group of miners about the first table roared a greeting.

The girl's smiling expression changed swiftly to one of flaring fury. She swept past the miners and headed straight for Dick Beckworth. "Dick," she said tensely, "I hate this place!"

"You know how I feel, Nell," said Dick, with a calm that belied his heartbeats. "I'm sick of all this, too. If you say the word we'll get out of it. I've made a good stake. My rake-off has given me a full poke at last. We'll go away from here, and I'll get some paying business. I'll never turn a card again—for Boss Tolley or any other man. I mean it!"

The girl was looking straight into his eyes. "Do you mean it, Dick?"

"Just that." He nodded. "As I told you yesterday, say the word and we'll light out—now—this morning. And I love you—love you like the devil!"

So it came about that two other riders left Canyon pass on this spring morning and crossing the west fork chose the wagon track to the summit of the canyon wall on that side of Runaway river.

The scar on the steep slope of the west wall down which that slide had fallen was now masked by a hardy growth of scrubby trees and brush. But the two old prospectors never passed the place, either going out of or returning to Canyon pass, without keenly studying the scar. Half way up the height had been a shelf with a hollow behind it—an ideal spot for a secret camp, for it could be observed neither from the trail on the opposite side of the river nor from the rim of the west wall of the canyon. Buried as this shelf had been by the slide, Steve Siebert and Andy McCann now marked the spot—and what it hid—and then glanced sardonically at each other across the foaming river. The fruit of their joint toil that lay behind that slide, one could not reach, and the other could not compass.

Above, the two in the plane of the sunshine and freer air rode along the brink of the overhang. "Say!" Dick said jerkily. "Let's not go to Lamberton—not direct."

"What?" There was a sharp note in her voice. She turned in her saddle to face him.

"I know a fine place—better hotel than at Lamberton—really a nice place to stop. We can reach it before night. Hoskins. You know." He still spoke nervously.

Nell's gaze no more left his face. She said evenly, as though her mind was quite placid again. "There's no parson at Hoskins."

He darted her another side glance. How was she taking it? Nell was seventeen, but a woman grown. "Shucks, honey," Dick said, putting out a hand to touch her for the first time. "We'll ride on and find a parson later. We're in no rush. We're out for a grand, good time"—

She pulled her horse across the path with a fierce jerk of the bridle-rein, and so escaped the defilement of his touch. Her right hand clutched the handle of her quirt, the knuckles bone-white. "Do you mean—you won't marry me?"

Dick smiled his most disarming smile. "Shucks, honey," he drawled. "Why so serious? Don't worry about that. I'm free to confess I'm not a marrying man. It's love that will hold us together. You're just as safe with me, whether we're married or not."

Nell Blossom had been fighting her own battles in harsh environment and against men almost from babyhood. Her cold rage now sprang from the fact that he should so mistake her character. Her quirt came up slowly; then it sang through the air. "You dog, you! Dick the Devil is your true name! And I thought"—

The man, shouting an oath, dragged his mount backward. The lash descended, missed his handsome face, but seared the horse across its neck. Squealing, the animal leaped to one side—to the verge of the out-thrust lip of the overhang. The gambler wheeled him, seeking to save himself.

There was a sudden crack, like the slapping of one board upon another. Between the plunging horse and the girl a gap yawned in the earth. Frost, the early rains, or perhaps time itself, had weakened this bit of the overhang. A patch no larger than a good-sized dining table broke away and slid outward. The scrambling, wild-eyed horse and the shrieking, white-faced man disappeared with it. The girl slipped down recklessly to the crumbling edge, trying to see down the face of the cliff. She could mark no trace of horse or rider. She could no longer hear the rumble of the falling debris. An icy horror gripped her. He was gone! After a little Nell spurred her mount, but she did not ride back toward Canyon pass.

CHAPTER II.

The Rev. Willett Ford Hunt read twice these closing words of the long letter.

. . . and so, my dear Willie, to use your own way of expressing it, I am steering straight for the devil—and enjoying the trip immensely. Wishing you were with me, Willie, I am, even after your rather bitter castigation, sincerely your friend, JOE HURLEY.

He laid the missive on his desk. Joe Hurley might be gay, irresponsible, reckless, even downright wicked; but he never could fail to be kind. Two years of close contact with the blithe westerner—those final two years at college before Hunt went to the divinity school—had assured the latter that Joe Hurley owned a heart of gold. It was five years since they had seen each other. When Joe had been "bounced" from college by the faculty he had celebrated the occasion by giving a farewell banquet at one of the shadiest hotels in the college town, to the wildest crowd of students he could get together.

The Rev. Willett Ford Hunt remembered the occasion now with a little shiver. Suppose the people of Ditson Corners should ever learn that he, their pastor, had been one of that company who had helped Joe Hurley celebrate his dismissal from scholastic halls!

Joe's father, a cattleman, had left him a considerable fortune. Joe had invested much of it in a certain mining claim called the Great Hope, for the young fellow had been keen enough to see that the day of the small cattleman was gone. The mine was paying a comforable income with the promise of doing more than that in the future, so Joe wrote. But he wrote more—much more than was exceedingly interesting to Hunt in his present discontented state of mind. He picked up the letter again, this broken sentence first meeting his eye:

. . . and if ever there was a peach, she surely is one, Willie. No songbird ever had anything on Nell. All Canyon pass—I mean the men folks—are at her feet again, now she has returned to town and is singing in Colorado Brown's cabaret. But no man, Willie, has seemed yet to put the come-hither on Nell Blossom. She just won't be led, coaxed, or driven. With all your famed powers of persuasion, reverend, I'd like to make a wager that you couldn't mold our Nell into a pattern of the New England virtues, such as your own prim little sister has become by this time, I've no doubt. No insult to Miss Betty intended, Willie. But our Nell—well, you'd have your hands full in trying to make her do a thing that she did not want to do.

Why had Joe gone out of his way to drag Betty's name into it? Betty had met Joe Hurley but once. It was an occasion when she had stopped at the college town on her way home from boarding school. But how did Joe know that Betty had changed so? That his sister was not the same cheerful, brisk, chatterbox of a girl she had been when Joe met her, Hunt quite well knew. And the change puzzled him.

This letter from Joe Hurley had come at a moment when Hunt was desperately and completely out of tune with his environment. There seemed to be no heart—understanding or otherwise—in Ditson Corners. A wild western mining camp, such as Joe said Canyon pass was, could be no more ungrateful soil to cultivate than this case-hardened, hide-bound, self-centered and utterly uncharitable Berkshire community. Hunt reached for the letter again. What had Joe said about there being a field for religious endeavor in Canyon pass?

Joshing aside, Willie, I believe you might dig down to the very heart of Canyon pass—and I believe it has a heart. You could do the "Lazarus, arise!" stunt if anybody could make the composite moral man of Canyon pass get up, put on a boiled shirt, and go forth a decent citizen. And believe me, the composite figure of the moral man here sadly needs such an awakening.

There was something that gripped Hunt in the rough and ready diction of this letter—something that aroused his imagination. Joe Hurley had something that he wanted. He wished he was with Joe, out there in that raw country. He felt that he could get nearer to mankind out there and perhaps—he said it reverently—nearer to the God he humly desired to serve. He thought of Betty. "She needs a change as much as I do. How does Joe guess that she is becoming a prim, repressed, narrow-thinking woman, and a Martha cumbered by many cares?"

He heard Betty's step on the porch, and in a moment she entered the study. He showed her part of the letter and suggested the advisability of joining Hurley at Canyon Pass, but she opposed the idea strongly seeming to hold the west in horror.

Joe Hurley, sitting his heavy-haunched bay, came to that fork where wheel-ruts from a westerly direction joined the road along the brink of the canyon wall. A cream-colored pony came cantering along the trail from Hoskins, its rider as gaily dressed as a Mexican vaquero. But it was the identity of this rider that invigorated the tone of the mining man's reflections. "Nell Blossom! Am I going to have the pleasure of being your escort back to Canyon Pass?"

"I'm going back to the pass—yes, Mr. Hurley," she said.

"Where you been since you left us all in the lurch? There was almost a riot at the Grub Stake when Tolley found out you had gone."

"Boss Tolley hasn't got anything on me," she said defensively. "I'd never sing there again, anyway."

"Somebody said you'd lit out for the desert with Steve Siebert and Andy McCann," he chuckled.

"I might just as well have gone with these old desert rats. Pocket hunting couldn't be much worse than Hoskins."

"Great saltpeter! What took you to Hoskins?" exclaimed Hurley. "Mother Tubbs got a letter from you, but she wouldn't tell us where you were."

"A girl has to work somewhere, and I was sick to death of the Grub Stake."

"Personally I'd like to see Tolley run out of town and the Grub Stake eliminated. But Colorado Brown has opened a new place and is going to run it right—so he says."

"That's what is bringing me back," Nell confessed. "He got word to me by Mother Tubbs, and he made me a better offer than Tolley ever would. But I expect one cabaret is about like another in these rough-neck towns."

He had been watching her closely as they talked. He had been watching Nell closely, off and on, for several years. Like many of the other young and unattached men of Canyon pass, Joe Hurley had at one time attempted to storm the fortress of Nell Blossom's heart. Finally he had become convinced that the girl was not for him. He had felt no little anxiety when, with the usual spring exodus of the two old desert rats, Steve Siebert and Andy McCann, Nell and Dick Beckwoith had likewise disappeared from the Grub Stake. All the right thinking men of the town, although they said little, feared the worst for Nell Blossom. Nell had displayed at the last some little interest in Dick the Devil. The other girls at the Grub Stake gossiped about it. Then came Mother Tubbs, in whose house Nell had lived for three years, with a bona-fide letter from the girl to dam the flood of gossip. Nell was working as usual in a cabaret. She had left Boss Tolley because she could not stand him any longer. But Joe Hurley noticed that something had changed Nell Blossom. She was no longer the happy-go-lucky girl she had been heretofore.

They skirted the overhang, their horses now at a canter. Nell suddenly pulled in her mount at a place where a patch along the brink of the treacherous cap had recently crumbled.

"Looks as if there might have been a small slide," observed Hurley cheerfully.

"Was—was anybody hurt?"

"Reckon not. Just about where the big slide was years ago."

Nell still looked back at the broken edge of the cliff. "Nobody missing, then? Nobody—er—left town?"

He laughed. "Nobody but you and old Steve and Andy McCann. Hold on! Dick Beckworth went about that time. He's gone to Denver, so Tolley says, to deal faro at a big place there."

They jogged on practically in silence until they came to a point from which the squalid town was first visible. "Ugh!" Nell shuddered. "It is such an ugly place."

"Where's your civic pride, Nell?" and the other chuckled.

"What is there to be proud of?" was her sharp demand. "The bulk of the wages from the mines and washings are spent for drink and in gambling. Canyon Pass is prosperous—yes. But at the expense of everything decent and everybody's decency. Mother Tubbs has got it right. There's neither law nor gospel, she says. Only such law as is enforced at the muzzle of the sheriff's gun. And as far as religion goes—when was there ever a parson in Canyon Pass?"

"They're rare birds, I admit. But you needn't blame me, Nell."

"I do blame you!" she exclaimed fiercely. "You're at fault—you, and Slickpenny Norris who runs the bank, and Bill Judson of the Three Star, and the manager of the Oreode company, and the other more influential men."

"Great saltpeter, Nell! You're not wailing for a Sunday school and a sky pilot?"

"Me? I reckon not!" She almost spat out the scornful denial. "I'm just telling you what your old Canyon Pass is. But I'm free to confess if a parson and a crew of psalm-singing tenderfoots came here, I'd like enough pull my freight again—and for keeps!"

At this outburst Joe Hurley broke into laughter. Nell Blossom was paradoxical—had always been. And yet, what Nell had said about the shortcomings of Canyon Pass stuck in Joe Hurley's mind. Within a few days the thought, fermenting within him, resulted in that letter which had so interested—not to say excited—the Rev. Willett Ford Hunt in far-away Ditson Corners.

The rumor got out that a parson was coming to settle down in Canyon Pass. If two men were conversing on the street, with both arms and whiskers waving in the breeze, it was a sure thing the topic under discussion was the coming of "that gospel-sharp Joe Hurley's sicked on to us." If two housewives met in midlight between store and store in the course of a forenoon's shopping, the principal subject of gossip was bound to be the possibility of a parson settling in Canyon Pass.

"It's needed," Rosabell Pickett announced with conviction. Rosabell played the piano in the Grub Stake, painted her face like a Piute Indian, dressed as gaudily as a circus poster, and was the only employee Boss Tolley had who really was not afraid of him. "It's needed," repeated Rosabell. "I wish he'd preach in the street out there, just stir up the people till they was with him, every one, and then march in here with an ax and smash every hooch bottle behind your bar, Tolley—that's what I wish."

"You're crazy, Rosie!" cried the proprietor of the Grub Stake. "You oughtn't to bite the hand that feeds you, Rosie. If it wasn't for the Grub Stake—and me—you wouldn't be wearin' rhinestone shoebuckles."

"Is that so?" countered the young woman. "You needn't worry none about my biting your hand 'nless you keep it washed oftener than is your present habit. And I want you to know that I don't sell my opinions when I take the Grub Stake's pay envelope—not much!"

"Well, I wanter see that dratted parson come in yere!" said Tolley blusteringly.

"He won't come alone," put in Hurley, who had been listening at the bar to the argument.

"Huh?"

"I say he won't come in here alone. I might as well serve notice here and now that this Parson Hunt is a friend of mine. I don't never aim to throw a friend down or fail him when he gets into a jam. If he comes in here—for any purpose, Tolley—I'll likely be with him."

"You keep him out o' yere! You keep him out!" blustered the other. "We don't want no sky pilots here in the pass. Anyway, I won't have 'em in the Grub Stake."

Joe Hurley remained awhile to banter repartee with Rosabell and some of the other idlers. But Boss Tolley slipped out. Mulligan Lane ran at the rear of the stores, saloons, and other amusement places facing this side of Main st. Colorado Brown's cabaret was not far from Tolley's rear door. Tolley lounged under the withered cottonwood behind Brown's dance-pavilion. The small figure coming up the slope of the lane approached the back door of Colorado Brown's place without seeing him until almost within arm's length.

"Hey, Nell!" She started, looked up, stepped back a pace. "Don't be scare't of me."

"Don't flatter yourself, Tolley," replied the girl curtly.

"Say—listen! You ain't treating me right. You walked out and left me flat. You didn't even ask me for a raise. How'd you know I wouldn't give you as much as Brown does?"

"I didn't want to know. I got through. You didn't have any hold on me, Tolley."

"Mebbe not. Mebbe I have. You better listen," for the girl was turning scornfully away. "You and Dick played it low down on me. You was my best performer, and Dick Beckworth was the best card-sharp I had. Looky here! You come back to the Grub Stake and—and I won't say nothing more."

"What do you mean? I am never going to sing in your joint again."

"You better think again." His voice was grim, menacing. "I can say something you won't like to hear."

"Say it." She spat the command out as boldly as was her usual speech.

"I been tellin' them Dick Beckworth lit out for Crescent City, and that I heard later he was dealing 'em in Denver."

"Dick Beckworth?" gasped the girl.

"Yeppy. I told 'em that. But I know dogned well he didn't ride north that day"—

"Why do you speak to me of Dick Beckworth?" She tried to say it boldly, calmly.

"I'm telling you. Listen," whispered Tolley hoarsely. "I could show 'em the bones of Dick's hoss in the gravel below the overhang—right at the edge of Runaway river. I got his saddle right now in my big safe. I reckon you know how the hoss and the saddle went over the cliff. And Dick was with 'em. He wasn't with 'em when I raked out the saddle. Dick had gone to some place a dern sight more distant than Crescent City—nor yet Denver. You think it over, Nell."

He turned and lurched heavily away. The girl stood rooted to the place, more shaken, more terrified, than even Boss Tolley suspected.

CHAP. III—The Approach.

Betty Hunt gazed through the broad pane of the Pullman at the flying fields and woods, the panorama of the railroad fences, and the still nearer blur of telegraph poles with that hopeless feeling a sentenced prisoner must have as he journeys toward the prison pen. Everything she cared for save her brother, everything she knew and that was familiar to her daily life, every object of her thought and interest, was being left behind by the onrush of the train. The drumming of the wheels over the rail-joints kept time with the swiftly flying thoughts of the girl. Those trying, anxious weeks which followed the funeral of her Aunt Prudence, with whom she had lived while Ford was completing his divinity course and received his ordination and which came to an end with his selection as pastor of the First church at Ditson Corners! All through these weeks was the dull, miserable pain of disillusion and horror that Betty must keep to herself. She could not tell Ford. She could tell nobody.

Aunt Prudence had left her money—conservatively invested—to Betty; but she was not to touch the principal until she was thirty. "If the girl marries before that age, no shiftless man can get it away from her," had been the spinster's frank statement in her will. The brother had a small nest egg left from his father's estate after paying his college and divinity school expenses.

When the two mountain-bogs, drawing and pushing the transcontinental train up the grade, ground to a brief stop at Crescent City, Joe Hurley was there to meet them. They started for Canyon Pass at once.

The high-springed stagecoach lurched drunkenly over the trail that wound through a valley Betty thought gnomes might have hewn out when the world was young. The three—herself, her brother, and Joe Hurley—occupied the seat on the roof of the plunging coach just behind the driver, "Lizard Dan." In time they crossed the small divide and came down the watershed into the valley of the east fork.

The mules dashed into the shallows. Spray flew as high as the roof of the coach. The mules settled into a heavier pace as they dragged the vehicle up the farther bank and into the foot of Main st. The crowd—a couple of hundred people of all ages—had gathered before the Wild Rose hotel. The moment Dan drew the mules to a halt, Hurley was half way to the ground and turned on the step to help Betty down.

As Hunt started to descend from the roof of the coach there sounded a single pistol-shot and the hat he wore—a low-crowned affair, the single mark of the cleric in his dress—sailed into the air with a ragged hole through brim and crown. As the hat flew upward a fusillade of five more shots followed the first, and the hat was torn to rags as it sailed over the roof of the coach. The crowd roared—some in anger, but most in derision. The man standing by the door of the Grub Stake reloaded his gun before putting it away, grinning broadly.

The young minister felt that the occasion was momentous. His usefulness here in Canyon Pass might depend upon his action or comment in this emergency. He started across the road toward the gunman. Those who stood in the way opened a lane for him with some alacrity. The smiles upon the faces of those who moved stiffened. Tom Hicks, the Grub Stake hanger-on who had done the shooting, came to sudden attention. His fingers crooked, creeping toward the butt of his gun again. Smiling still, Hunt reached him. The parson's steady gaze held that of Hicks.

"Brother," Hunt said cheerfully, "you've spoiled my hat. It's the only hat I've got with me until my trunks come in by freight. You've had your fun, and it's only fair you should pay for it."

Then Hunt's hands moved suddenly, swiftly. In a flash he had snatched the broad-brimmed hat from Hicks' head and placed it on his own. "Turn about is fair play, don't you think?" said the parson, and without waiting for a reply he turned on his heel and went back across the street!

A roar of laughter rose from the crowd. The broad back of the parson offered a sure target; but Hicks knew better than to draw his gun a second time. Instead he turned away, hatless, and sought sanctuary in the Grub Stake.

Had Betty Hunt not had Joe Hurley to steady her as she came down from the roof of the stage coach to the ground in the midst of the crowd, she never could have stood upright through that scene! The sight of her brother's hat flying overhead, the target of Hicks' six-gun, led her to believe that Hunt was in peril—deadly peril. But as she heard the boisterous laughter of the crowd and saw the strang hat flapping about the Rev. Willett Ford Hunt's ears, Betty became suddenly angry. "Take off that horrid hat, Ford!" she cried when the parson joined them.

"Don't do it, Willie," interposed Hurley. "Let it be. No crown of glory you may earn will ever so become you. Continue to wear it, reverend, and not a soul in Canyon pass will ever laugh at you, if they do at the hat. It will remind 'em that you're an honest-to-goodness he-man. Now, let's go into the Wild Rose and get you settled. I told 'Cholo' Sam and Maria to clean up some rooms for you and try and make things halfway decent."

Early the next morning Hunt, from his window, looked out on Mulligan lane. There were some frowsy building within sight—evidently dwellings of a kind. Suddenly he became aware of voices below, at the back of the hotel. He heard the maundering tones of an interested man and—sharply contrasted—the voice of a woman. "Get up, Sam, and come home."

"Couldn't do it, gal. Couldn't think—hic!—of it. 'Twould be givin' up my indepen—hic!—dence. I'm—I'm my own master. Leastways, I am on Sunday when the mine's shut down. Here I stand"—

"But you don't stand!" ejaculated the woman's voice sharply. "And I don't believe you can."

Hunt looked down into the lane. There was an overturned box just below his window and slouched down upon it was a withered, baldheaded man. The other person engaged in the colloquy gained Hunt's interest and held it at once. She was small, lissome, of a vigorous figure and vastly more attractive to his eye than any girl he had ever looked at.

"Get up and come home with me," said the girl again. "What will Mother Tubbs say when she sees you?"

"Heh! I reckon I better stay yere," was the reply. "Man can't keep his—hic!—dignity when a great walrus of a woman throws him 'round like he was a sack of spuds. I tell you, gal, I made a great mistake in marryin' that woman."

"It was a great mistake for her—that's a fact," was the sharp rejoinder. "Get up!"

The girl again tried to drag him to his feet. Sam Tubbs merely fell over sideways and sprawled helpless upon the ground. Hunt, without his coat or vest, but grabbing up the flap-brimmed hat he had secured from the gunman the evening before, opened his door, ran down the back stairway of the hotel, and made his way quickly into the lane. As he appeared before Nell Blossom, standing over the new slumbering drunkard, he looked anything but the cleric. "Can I be of help?" he asked.

"You can't help me none, mister," replied Nell brusquely.

"I scarcely think you need help," said Hunt, smiling. "But where does he live?"

"Where I do. Down the lane a ways."

"I think we can get him there," said Hunt, and without further ado he stooped, got a grip on Sam Tubbs, and proceeded to throw him over his shoulder like a sack of meal.

The girl's eyes grew round. "You wasn't behind the door when they were passing out muscle," she remarked. "Well, come on. I'll show you the way."

The new slumbering Sam Tubbs was scarcely a heavy burden, and to Hunt the task of carrying him was slight. He was considerably amused as well as interested in the girl. It was quite apparent that she did not know he was the new parson.

They turned abruptly into another narrow alley and came to the front of the Tubbs' shack. Nell led the way imperturbably around to the back door.

"Just getting a nice breakfast for you, honey," said Mother Tubbs, filling the doorway and seeing Nell first of all. "Now, if only Sam would come along—is that Sam? He ain't dead, is he?"

"Only dead drunk," said Nell in scorn.

"Where shall I put him?" asked Hunt quietly.

"Well, I reckon it don't much matter. You can drop him down anywhere, mister. I'll fetch a dishpan o' water and sluice him down when I get a chance." Then she saw and recognized the parson's face, for Mother Tubbs had been at the Wild Rose hotel the day before when the stage coach had arrived. "Goodness me! I declare, mister—er—Brother Hunt, this is good of ye."

Nell stared. The note of respect in Mother Tubbs' voice revealed in a flash Hunt's identity to the cabaret singer.

"I am sartain sure obliged to you," went on the old woman. "Nell Blossom never could have got him home alone." Hunt had lowered her husband to a seat on the porch floor and propped his back against a post. "Mebbe you two ain't acquainted. Nell Blossom is a-living with me and has been doing so—off and on—for more than three years. Ever since her pa, old Henery Blossom, up and died. She's a singer, Nell is—I'm hoping, when you get to holding meetings, that we can get her to sing in the choir."

Hunt bowed, smiling, to the girl. Her expression of countenance was no less forbidding than before. She offered him no encouragement.

"Won't you stop for breakfast with me and Nell, Brother Hunt?" went on the hospitable old woman.

Nell opened her lips to speak, then shut them in a straight, red line. In any case, Hunt caught the significance of her attitude of objection.

"Not this morning, Mrs.—er—Tubbs, is it? Sister Tubbs? I am glad to have met you." He met her huge hand with a warm clasp of his own. "When we get started here, I am sure I can depend on your aid and good wishes?"

"Youbetcha!" exclaimed the old woman.

CHAP. IV—A Beginning.

Sunday afternoon when the weather was propitious was the time for social intercourse in Canyon pass. Those who had worked or played or had been intoxicated the night before had slept off the effects of their super-exertions for the most part. They came forth now shaved and in clean garments and strolled to Main st. It was still too early for the cabarets and gambling places to be open, and even the saloon bars were somnolent. The pivotal point of the town's rendezvous and gossip on Sunday afternoon was the Three Star grocery. In front of that old Bill Judson held forth between his exertions of waiting on such customers as might claim his attention.

Hunt and Joe Hurley came out of the Wild Rose hotel. The minister had not donned his clerical garments. He was dressed as he had been the day before when he arrived on the stage coach, except for the hat he wore. That flopping-brimmed headgear which he had taken from Tom Hicks crowned the parson's brush of crisp, dark hair.

"Boys," said Hurley, when they came near, "meet Willie Hunt. I reckon you know Willie is a real man, if he is a parson. Mr. Hunt, meet Jib Collins, Cale Mack, Jim Tierney, and—last but not least—Bill Judson, who is the honored mentor of this camp."

Hunt knew how to meet these men—he was by nature a "good mixer." There is much in the grasp of a hand, a steady look, an unafraid smile, that recommends the stranger to such bold spirits.

"Parson," pursued Judson, "we was just discussin' your business as you and Joe come along. In my opinion we need you yere at Canyon Pass. To my mind religion is a mighty good thing. We're loose livin', we're loose talkin', and we need to be jacked up right smart. You can count on me, parson, to back any play you make, clean across the board."

"You are interested, then, Mr. Judson, in any attempt we may make to inaugurate services here on Sunday?" Hunt asked cheerfully.

"Youbetcha!" was the hearty rejoinder.

"I take it from brief observation that this day—the Sabbath—is observed very little at present in Canyon pass?"

"True as true," said the storekeeper.

"To get people really interested in divine services on this day, don't you think we should begin by making some difference—a real difference—between the first day and the other six?" Hunt continued.

"I—I reckon you're right, parson," Judson said, though with some hesitation. "Of course, the boys have been used to having their freedom on Sundays, and their fun. I don't believe you could go far in shutting down the saloons and gambling tables—not right at first."

"But would you go as far as you could personally to establish a better standard of Sunday observance?" pursued Hunt.

"Heh?" ejaculated the puzzled Judson.

Hunt, still smiling, mounted the steps of the store, closed the door, and turned the great key which had been left in the outside of the lock. He removed the key and handed it to Bill Judson as he came down the steps again. "Mr. Judson," he said in a perfectly unmoved voice, "if you will begin by keeping that door locked on Sundays you will be leading the way in this community toward a proper observance of the Lord's day."

Judson's face turned from its usual weather-beaten tan to a purple-red. His rheumy eyes sparked. Then slowly, reflectively, a grin wreathed his tobacco-stained lips and crinkled the outer corners of his eyelids. "Parson," he said, thrusting out his hand, "you're on! I'll show these fellers I'm a good sport. Nobody was ever able to say honestly that Bill Judson took watery and I won't give 'em the chance't to say it now."

Just after sunset Hunt and his sister were returning to the hotel after a walk. At the mouth of a narrow lane, two figures stood, a man and a girl, and their voices were sharp and angry.

"That's what I'm telling you," the man's voice drawled, a note in it that at once raised in Hunt that feeling that any decent man experiences who hears one of his own sex so address a woman. "You got to come to it, and you might as well come now as later. I got you on the hip—that I have. Understand?"

"I understand nothing of the kind, Tolley. You're a bluffer and a beast! And if you don't let me alone"—

"Don't fool yourself," interrupted the man. "I won't let you alone till you come back to the Grub Stake. But I won't talk to you about it again. I'll talk to others."

Then the girl told him angrily to do his worst. Betty attempted to pass on swiftly; but the parson hesitated.

"You'll do what I tell you," muttered the bully with an oath, as Hunt stepped near. "If you don't come back to the Grub Stake to sing tomorrow night, I'll let the whole o' Canyon pass know"—

It was just then that Hunt's hand dropped upon Boss Tolley's shoulder. Nor did it drop lightly. The parson twisted the big man around by one muscular exertion and looked into his flushed face. "Don't you think you've said enough to the young lady?" Hunt asked quietly. "You have evidently forgotten yourself."

"Suppose you go, Miss Blossom," suggested Hunt with unruffled voice. "Let me speak to this man."

But the minister had quite mistaken Nell Blossom's temper. She turned on him like a shot. "What are you butting in for, I'd like to know? I can take care of myself—always have and always expect to." Then she laughed harshly, turning to Tolley again. "Better beat it, Tolley, or the parson will do something to you besides grabbing your hat."

The dance-hall keeper, swearing still, jerked away from Hunt's grasp. He did not seek to continue the quarrel, however. He abruptly turned up the alley and disappeared. (Continued Tomorrow.)

Hindu Idealist's Case Against American Women

Philosopher and Barrister From Bombay Finds His Illusions Sadly Shattered by Observations in Western World.

By Cristine McKenzie

ILLUSTRATED BY HERMAN PALMER.

"The woman who is working for the enfranchisement of her sex in India will look in vain to America for the soulful and sublimated type of feminist.'

AFTER having come from the other side of the world to gather inspirational information which he could take back to the women of his own country, Vasudeo B. Metta, author, art critic and barrister of Bombay, now on his first visit to America, has given up the quest and has withdrawn to the seclusion of a little office overlooking the white lights of Broadway, where he spends much time in intensive meditation. He came here expecting to admire American women. Instead, he finds that he rather dislikes them. He hopes that most of those he has met are not too representative of the millions he will have no opportunity to see.

Imagine the surprise of this Oriental idealist when certain flower-like fledglings in society ignored his elegant manners and punctuated their chatty talk with such syllables as "Darn!' and "Gosh!" and "Bosh!" while he was doing his utmost to be politely entertaining. As he was readjusting his impressions after a succession of similar shocks, Mr. Metta came to the conclusion that the American woman is to blame for a long list of the evils that have overtaken society here. But the fault he particularly censures her for and the thing that disqualifies her for becoming a model for the modern women patriots of his country is what he calls her unnatural aspiration to behave and talk like a man.

What Mr. Metta meant to find here was a soulful and sublimated type of feminist who might be posed as a pattern for such women as Mrs. Naidu and Mrs. Gokhale, two leading political orators of India, who are supporting Mr. Gandhi, the leader of the non-co-operation movement; Mrs. Hirabai Tata, who is agitating for the enfranchisement of Indian women; Mrs. Atiya Begum Rahamin, who is revealing the beauty of Indian music; Mrs. Sukhlata Rao, who paints exquisite pictures; Mrs. Chaudhrani, who lectures, writes and gives demonstrations on hand-spinning and weaving, and Her Highness Nazil Begun, who is devoting her life to furthering the cause of native art and culture. Besides being a lecturer Mrs. Naidu writes charming poetry.

"TO my mind," said Mr. Metta, "the most demoralizing influence of Western civilization is woman working for a livelihood and doing the same ugly things that men are doing. It is beautiful to see them so energetic, but it seems a pity that their energies should ever be directed toward activities that are sure to starve the spiritual and artistic side of their natures. Being so everlastingly occupied leaves no opportunity for fine development, and if women shall cease to be fine and superior, what will become of the men?"

He did not say it in so many words, but Mr. Metta's opinion would seem to be that men are poor weak things who need to be bolstered and sustained by the uplifting idealism of woman. He never has expected too much of man in the way of spiritual achievement. He would like to believe that woman is superior, and he is the sort of idealist who takes his disappointments deeply. He sees this country on the brink of moral degradation and disintegration, and mostly he blames the women. He finds here all the sins of old Europe in exaggerated forms, without so much as a coating of exterior charm. Egoism runs rampant. Nothing matters but money. Every one is out for material advancement—especially the women. And because women are the leaders—the unfortunate lords of creation find themselves in a treadmill where there is no beauty, no romance, nothing much but hurry and worry and noise.

"American women could learn much from the women of my country," the Bombay barrister suggested. "They could learn that happiness consists in giving rather than getting. When a Hindu woman marries, her dominating idea is: "What can I do to help my husband and make him happy?" From what I have been able to observe it would seem to me that the American woman's ideal with regard to a man is: "What can I work him for?"

THIS critic from the Orient does not take kindly to what he terms the unreasonableness of the Western woman's insistence upon the unswerving devotion and concentration of a man. Life, he argues, is a work of art in which the ideal might be said to be art for art's sake. "If a wife by her beautiful work and womanly conduct feels that she has done her duty to herself and to life, why should she step down from her pedestal to demand rewards for moral actions?" he asks. "Even in India some women have the misfortune to be jealous and selfish, but the wisest ones know that to live beautifully is the surest guarantee not alone of their own happiness, but of the general good. If a man should be disappointing there is not much to do but to be patient and forgiving. We all know that sermons on morals are a terrific bore and that they do more harm than good. But a beautiful act of devotion touches something very deep in the nature of man and inspires him to better things.

"I am sure that our homes in India are much happier than your homes in America. For one thing we are free from sex warfare. And our women are content if they have the respect of their husbands. The Oriental woman never makes the mistake of trying to be like her husband. She assumes that women and men are different. And because she set out to express herself beautifully in a peculiarly feminine way she creates about herself and her home an atmosphere of ideality to which all men aspire. She is never too busy to sit still and discuss ideas for the sake of their beauty and cultural influence. I am sorry to say that with the exception of a very few charming people I have met here, every one seems obsessed with the conviction that an idea is not worth anything unless it can be converted into money."

HE wishes American women would not bother so much about cramming their heads with facts and trying to impress a stranger with the vastness of their knowledge, because there is a possibility that the facts may turn out to be wrong after a while. He spent ever so many years as a student at Cambridge in England, and now he is trying to forget a lot of the things he learned there. He would not mind women being brilliant if they might manage at the same time not to be mannish. And he could forgive the American woman most of her other faults, even her imitation of man in the pursuit of material gain, if only she would not imitate his office vocabulary when he meets her at some pretty function.

"It is my belief,' said he, "that no matter how many extraordinary women there may be—I mean individual intellectual women—they never can compete with man. Man will be more consistent intellectually, because he is not dominated by his emotions as woman is. But if woman would give herself a chance she might be superior morally and spiritually. It would be nicer and so much better for Western civilization if she would go in for these things instead of spending her energy on interests that do not matter."

The interview had interrupted an afternoon with d'Annunzio, and Mr. Metta's mind was saturated with elegant conversation. He paused to ponder and speculate on what an American girl might say if a young man should speak to her after the fashion of the beautiful lines Paolo addressed to Francesco. He wondered if she would say, "Oh, Gosh!"

Much as he recoils from a certain manifestation of egoism that has displeased him in America, Mr. Metta admits that there is a good deal of egoism in the system he recommends. His ideal is to have every woman develop herself to the extreme limit of her artistic and spiritual capacity without neglecting to keep herself strong and beautiful. If one is not sure how to go about it he suggests that two hours spent in solitude and silent meditation within one's self can get one further than a few years of interrupted thinking with other people. From a session like this he emerges optimistic in the assurance that since life spins in cycles it cannot be so very long before a cycle will swing around in which women will concentrate on the old-fashioned ideals of spirituality and charm.

the English text would rule. Should there be a disagreement, the matter would be discussed and an agreement reached between the two governments.

M. CLEMENCEAU observed that the Versailles treaty was in French alone. MR. WILSON thought this treaty had lapsed.

M. PICHON repeated that in all international agreements the French text ruled. Even at the congress of Berlin French was used.

MR. WILSON pointed out that he did not dispute the fact that French has been the standard, but as to the congress of Berlin he would observe that America was not represented. M. CLEMENCEAU stated that he could not go further than the amendment he had proposed.

MR. LLOYD GEORGE suggested that if that were to be the case it would be better to have no official text, and each country would only understand the text which its representatives signed.

M. CLEMENCEAU observed that if so much importance were attached to such small matters it was truly a bad beginning for the society of the league of nations.

MR. WILSON observed that he was extremely sorry that this aspect had been given to the question. He did not like to leave a question of this sort where it then rested, and suggested that the delegates think the matter over, sleep on it, and take it up at the next meeting.

THE upshot of the matter was that English and French were both made official and the treaty was printed with English on one page and French on the next. It was one of many evidences of the shifting of power from the old to the new. Indeed, English was the dominant language at the conference. A large proportion of the foreign delegates, like the Chinese, Japanese, South Americans and others, spoke it as their second language, and of the council of the five heads of the great powers only Orlando, of Italy, spoke no English, while only two, Clemenceau and Orlando, spoke French. Clemenceau and Sonnino (foreign minister of Italy) spoke English fluently, and Baron Makino, of Japan, spoke it well.

When the three (the president, Mr. Lloyd George and M. Clemenceau) were in sessions alone, as they often were during the later days of the conference, the conversation was wholly in English. At other times, and in all of the larger conferences, the speeches had to be interpreted from English to French and French to English. This work was done by a remarkable Frenchman, Professor Mantoux. I have seen him sit through a long conference, and as each speech was made in English rapidly made notes in French, or if the speech was in French, his notes were in English; and when the speaker finished he arose immediately and repeated his speech at length—often eloquently—and with such accuracy, such complete understanding, that he was rarely corrected.

Italian was occasionally heard at the conferences, and German, of course, at the single meeting with the Germans at Versailles, but other languages almost never. When the picturesque Emir Feisal, the delegate from Arabia, who had only his native Arabian, spoke at a conference he was interpreted in English by Colonel Lawrence. Venizelos, the Greek premier, spoke French to perfection.

No doubt this decision to make English coequal with French as the diplomatic language of the world hurt French sensibilities and especially hurt Clemenceau. But Clemenceau met this and other setbacks at Paris, for which he was later bitterly criticised, like the wise old philosopher he was.

"The state of mind of our allies," he explained (as quoted by M. Tardieu), "is not necessarily the same as our own, and when we are not in agreement with them it is unjust to blame those who do not succeed in convincing them or to blame them for evil intentions which are not in their hearts.

"What are you going to do about it? Each of us lives encased in his own past. Auguste Comte said we live dead men's lives and it is true. . . .

"There should be no surprise at the resistance we have encountered. The one said or thought, 'I am English,' the other thought, 'I am American.' Each had as much right to say so as we had to say we are French. Sometimes it is true they made me suffer cruelly. But such discussions must be entered into not with the idea of breaking off, or smashing the serving tables and the china, as was Napoleon's wont, but with the idea of making one's self understood."

How to Make Scrim Curtains Last; Other Hints

WHEN your scrim curtains get too soiled and borders fade, dye them with soap dye a darker color, old blue and any shade that matches the color scheme of the room.

To empty the dust bag on the electric cleaner, use large manilla paper bags in which bulk groceries are delivered. Insert the mouth of dust bag well inside the paper bag and shake gently, but thoroughly. This prevents the dust flying in the air again and provides a convenient way of disposing of the sweepings, as the bag can be closed and burned.

To remove paint from windows, add one tablespoon of coal oil to a quart of warm water, soak the paint for five minutes, then scrape with a copper penny. This leaves no marks.

To keep long-stemmed flowers a long time, take a sharp knife and split the stem up a little each day. The stem can be split up to the flower head and in this way you have a nice long stem as long as the flower lasts.

LINOLEUM will keep bright and last longer if you apply white shellac with a clean paint brush two or three times a year. Linoleum should be clean and dry before shellac is put on and be careful not to lap the strokes.

To preserve the enamel on oil stoves, wipe over occasionally with a cloth dipped in any kind of grease. Then rub dry with a clean, lintless flannel. When cleaning the carving, use a soft toothbrush with a good furniture polish. The brush will reach all the small places and save a lot of time. Then rub dry with a piece of cheesecloth. The furniture will have a clean, bright finish.

Instead of throwing away the lids from pound lard substitute cans, enamel them white or cream, stencil a border inside of rim or enamel rim in gay color and you have an ideal coaster for lemonade or tea glass, specially unique for the summer porch. After using them they can be wiped off with damp cloth.

Tonics the Homemaker Finds in Field and Garden

AFTER four months of hard work our stoves and furnaces need a thorough cleaning from accumulated ashes and cinders. Our bodies are a sort of furnace in which food instead of coal or wood is burned. During the bracing days of fall and winter, large quantities of food are required, and this causes an accumulation of waste. By the time spring comes the body often feels the effect of this in weariness, headaches and general ill health.

When April comes with the first warm winds, when tiny buds peep out from their covering of dead leaves, when the small boy takes to marbles, when druggists prepare to carry on a thriving business in spring tonics, it is time for the homemaker to turn to her "garden of herbs," and select such foods as shall put to rout "spring fever."

The wise homemaker cuts down on meats, fats or fried foods, and chooses instead the tonic giving, refreshing products of the field and garden, even if she must go to market for them.

OLIVES, leeks and young onions quicken a sluggish liver. Asparagus, that delicate and delicious early vegetable, has slightly laxative and diuretic properties. Spinach is rich in iron and other salts. Lettuce of all kinds contains salts, and a small amount of a sleep, including substance which makes it helpful in quieting nerves and promoting sleep. Rhubarb, despite its refreshing and slightly laxative qualities, contains oxalic acid which makes trouble for those who have a tendency to gravel or gout. All the products of the garden are rich in the life giving vitamines, and the alkaline salts required to offset the acidity liable to occur from the free use of meat. They furnish the bulk and water needed to cleanse the alimentary tract, purify the blood and stimulate the whole digestive system.

As cleansing and stimulating agents, green vegetables are more valuable raw than cooked, but to give them their greatest nutritive value they are cooked and served with egg, milk, oil salad dressing and other accompaniments.

Cauliflower Duchesse.

This is a pleasing variation in the preparation of this vegetable and is made as follows: Boil the cauliflower until tender, drain and leave whole or separate into flowerets, as preferred. Pour over a sauce made by melting two tablespoons of butter and adding to it three tablespoons of vinegar, one-fourth teaspoon of salt, and two tablespoons each of chopped green pepper and chopped pimento.

Peas With Mint.

This makes a delicious combination to serve with lamb and in this case the usual mint sauce may be omitted. Melt one tablespoon butter, add two tablespoons of flour, one-half teaspoon salt and one-eighth teaspoon of pepper and mix thoroughly together. Add one cup of milk gradually and bring to the boiling point, stirring constantly. Add one-fourth cup of finely chopped mint and two cups of hot, cooked peas. Mix together and serve at once.

Onions on Toast.

Use the young onions that have long thick stems like leeks. Cut off the roots, and all but four inches of the stem, wash and parboil five minutes. Drain, add boiling water, and boil gently forty-five minutes or until tender. Add salt when about half done. Drain, arrange on slices of toast which have been moistened with onion water, and pour melted butter or cream sauce.

Stuffed Fresh Mushrooms.

One pound large mushrooms, three tablespoons butter, three tablespoons onion, two tablespoons ham, one tablespoon flour, one-half cup cream, pepper, nutmeg, fresh bread crumbs, one egg yolk, one and one-half tablespoons lemon juice, one and one-quarter teaspoon salt.

Brush mushrooms, remove stems and peel caps. Chop stems, onions and ham and cook ten minutes, or until brown, in two tablespoons butter. Add flour. When well mixed, add cream, three-fourths teaspoon salt, cayenne and nutmeg. Stir until mixture boils, add two tablespoons bread crumbs and the egg yolk. Mix well and spread on a plate to cool. Saute mushrooms caps six minutes in one tablespoon butter, sprinkle with lemon juice and one-half teaspoon salt. Then stuff each mushroom with the mushroom mixture, smoothing the top carefully. Dip each mushroom in melted butter then in fresh bread crumbs. Place on baking dish and cook eight minutes in hot oven.

Potato Balls Filled With Peas.

Boil and mash potatoes and season with salt, pepper and plenty of butter and a little cream. Form into small balls, shaped like peas and make a hollow in the center. Fill with peas which have been boiled and prepared with butter and salt. Place in oven until brown and serve.

Other Varities in Vegetables.

Cabbage cooked with celery, creamed and served on toast. Onions scalloped in white sauce in which cheese has been melted. Turnips served diced with drawn butter sauce and garnished with chopped parsley.

SALADS FOR SPRING DAYS.

Easter Jelly Salad.

One pint cooked tomatoes, small bay leaf, slice of onion, small stalk of celery, two or three cloves, one tablespoon gelatin softened in four tablespoons cold water, salt.

Simmer the tomatoes and seasoning for a few minutes. Strain and add the softened gelatin. Stir well and pour mixture into eggshall molds. To prepare the eggshell, open the eggs at the small end, remove the egg and rinse the inside of the shell with cold water. Fill the shells with the tomato mixture and set aside to harden in a pan of meal or any other substance that will hold them upright. When ready to serve, remove the shells from the jelly and place the tomato egg upright on a lettuce leaf. Serve with mayonnaise dressing.

Pineapple Mousse Salad.

One tablespoon gelatine, four tablespoons cold water, one cup hot pineapple syrup, one-quarter cup lemon juice, six slices pineapple, one cup celery, one teaspoon chives, one-half teaspoon paprika, one-half teaspoon salt, one cup cream.

Soak gelatine in cold water, add to hot pineapple juice. Add lemon juice, cool and add pineapple, celery and chives, cut in small pieces and paprika and salt. As it stiffens fold in cream beaten stiff. Put in small baking powder boxes, cover with buttered paper, and tin cover. Pack in ice and salt, using two parts crushed ice to one part rock salt. Leave two hours. Remove from molds, cut in slices and serve on lettuce leaves with mayonnaise dressing.

Jewel Salad.

One-half envelope gelatine, one-half cup cucumber, one-quarter cup vinegar, two-thirds cup pineapple syrup, one-half cup sliced pineapple, one-quarter cup cold water, one-quarter cup boiling water, one tablespoon Tarrigan vinegar, one tablespoon lemon juice, one-quarter cup sugar, salt.

Pare, chop and drain cucumber. There should be one-half cup. Chop and drain pineapple; there should be one-half cup. Mix cucumber and pineapple and add gelatine, which has been soaked in cold water and dissolved in boiling water; then add remaining ingredients. Turn into mold, first dipping in cold water and chill. Remove from mold to nest of lettuce leaves. Slice and serve with mayonnaise.

Cucumber Baskets.

Select three long regular shaped cucumbers, cut a piece from both the stem and bottom end of each, then cut in half crosswise. Cut two pieces from each section, leaving remaining pieces in shape of basket with handles. Remove pulp and seeds in sufficiently large pieces to cut cubes for refilling the baskets, the remaining half fill with pieces of tomatoes. Arrange baskets on lettuce leaves and pour over French dressing.

Daisy Salad.

Boil one egg for each person to be served. When cold halve the egg carefully and remove yolks. Crumble the yolks and mix with equal quantity of mayonnaise. Arrange lettuce leaves on individual plates and place in the center of each round a spoonful of the yolks. Surround this with a circle of the whites of the egg cut into slender strips to imitate daisy petals.

EARLY SPRING DESSERTS.

France Strawberries.

Insert strawberries in slices of pineapple to replace the hulls and garnish with pink whipped cream.

Strawberry Snowdrift.

Bake any good sponge cake mixture in thin sheets. When cold cut with sharp knife in narrow strips about four inches long. Pile these log cabin fashion about four inches high on small individual plates. Heap center with whipped cream slightly sweetened and flavored and dispose sugared strawberries about the base.

Angel Parfait.

One-half cup sugar, one-half cup water, whites three eggs, one pint cream.

Place over fire in a small saucepan sugar and water, stir until the sugar dissolves, then boil without stirring until it spins a thread. Beat stiff and dry the whites of eggs and add to them slowly the hot syrup after it has been taken from the fire about a minute; beat well and flavor with vanilla. When cold stir in the cream, well whipped and drained. Freeze. It is well to let stand three or four hours to ripen. Simple, dainty and good.

Vanilla Nut Parfait.

One-third cup sugar, one beaten egg white, one teaspoon vanilla, one-half cup water, three-quarters cup heavy cream, one-half chopped nut meats, walnuts, pecans or blanched almonds.

Boil sugar and water until syrup will spin a thread when dropped from tip of spoon, pour slowly on beaten egg white and continue beating until mixture is cool. Put heavy cream in top of double boiler, add vanilla, beat until stiff and fold into first mixture with chopped nut meats. Freeze.

STRAWBERRY CREAM.

Remove the stems of a quart of ripe, fresh strawberries; crush them slightly and cover with a teacup of powdered sugar. Let them stand three or four hours; then rub through a fine sieve. Stir together a pint of milk and a pint of cream, or use all cream. Sweeten slightly and warm. Stir in the strawberry pulp; whisk the mixture; fill small china or glass cups, and serve them on a napkin if the cups do not fit into a dish. Raspberries or other fruit may be treated in the same way. When the fruit is not quite ripe, it should be stewed before mixing with the cream.

MUSHROOMS AND EGGS.

Peel and mince pound cooked mushrooms and one-half dozen hard-boiled eggs. Mix with one cup hickorynut meats, add the following dressing and serve very cold: Cream dressing; beat to a cream one tablespoon (heaping) butter, same of flour. Stir into these one beaten egg, one tablespoon of sugar, a teaspoon salt and one-half teaspoon each dry mustard and white pepper. Add four tablespoons strong vinegar and two of water. Cook until thick, and just before serving add one-half cup of cream.

Little Hints That Make Sewing Room Work Easier

SATISFACTORY shoe trees can be made from old corset steels. Wrap each end with tissue paper and insert in the shoes.

Try sewing a hook and eye at the bottom of all plackets and then press down with hammer flat. This is fine where there are careless girls always ripping their skirt openings farther down.

When washing a white woolen sweater be sure that it is thoroughly rinsed in several waters to remove all soaps, otherwise it will become yellow.

If you do not own a wardrobe trunk and are taking a trip, secure about six good-sized shirt boxes. In each put different articles, thin dresses in one, men's shirts in another, baby dresses in another, etc. When you reach your destination, not only will the clothes be easy to find, as each box can be marked, but they will not be mussed up as is common after a long trip.

IN CARING for undergarments, reinforce, in making, parts subject to hard wear. Sew buttons on children's garments through several thicknesses of cloth to prevent tearing out. Run a few threads back and forth in the heel and toe of a new stocking.

Darn promptly small holes in stockings and other knitted underwear. A stitch in time saves the garment. Rub a piece of soap across the end of a run to stop the run until you can mend it.

Wash stockings frequently. It prevents continued strain on the same part of the stocking, and rotting and change of color from perspiration. Wash new stockings before wearing. This prolongs their life.

Clean canvas shoes on shoe-trees to prevent shrinking.

What Every Woman Wants to Know

Edited By Anne Rittenhouse

Following the Fashions in Dressing Tables

IT IS quite clever and in accordance with the usage of women of wealth and artistic resourcefulness to have a small Chinese lacquered table in black and gold or red and black in place of the old-time dressing table. There is a good sized oblong mirror framed in lacquer hung above this little dressing table by means of a four or five inch wide lettuce green ribbon tied in a perky bow that shows at the picture moulding. This is pure eighteenth century usage we are told, and whether it had historic backing or not it is charming.

Some smart women regard bureaus as distinctly passe. They have banished them from their personal apartments. In place, they have given carpenters and cabinet makers quite a bit to do. The latest idea is to have a series of drawers, small cupboards, closets and compartments built into your bedroom as part of the woodwork scheme, and painted like the woodwork. Mauve or blue, lettuce green or yellow—these are the colors that are chosen for woodwork new.

Sometimes there are two sets of drawers and compartments arranged with a space of three or four feet between. In this space there is a shelf and above it a mirror is put in the wall. There is a little frill of taffeta and lace at the edge of the shelf-like dressing table, and, of course, there are the usual lace cover and other dressing-table frou-fours to complete the picture.

THE shelf, if possible, should be finished in kidney shape in the front. On the whole the arrangement is rather suggestive of the dressing table behind the wings at the theater, but it is the thing upon which many smart women have set their hearts, and ranks with the Chinese lacque rtable in te realm of smart boudoir equipment.

What the French call the coiffeuse, a sort of small dressing table, is the third alternative. It is not the thing to use the top of a bureau for one's toilet paraphernalia, and generally speaking the bureau has been banished. That is, by the very small minority of women who can indulge their caprices in such matters.

Silver has been banished from the dressing table. The silver dressing set is archaic. The brush and comb do not properly belong on the dressing table, even if one comes in the amber set part of which decorates the top of the dressing table. Rather it is placed in a Russian or French box on top of the dressing table.

Perhaps amber is the favorite material for these toilet sets at the moment. However, often toilet sets are sold merely for traveling. Many women dislike the effect of an array of matching pieces on the top of the dressing table. Always there should be a hand-glass, but this is sometimes a fancy Venetian or French affair that does not match any other pieces.

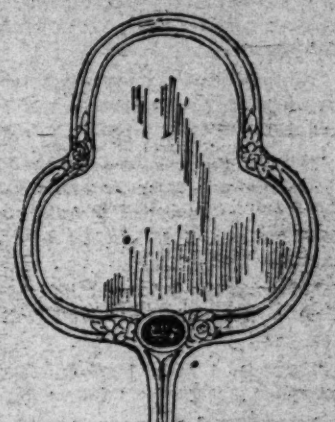

Then there should be boxes for powder on the dressing table, and some container for lip salve. Cold cream and most cosmetics are best kept in the bathroom. There is usually a small box for jewelry, possibly another box containing manicure essentials, and a pin cushion.

ALWAYS there must be two flagons for cologne or perfume. And sometimes an atomized. It would be truth to say that women are more discreet in the using of perfume upon themselves, but more indulgent in displaying it and having it about for their own personal amusement.

For the bureau cover, lace, preferably antinque lace, combined with fine hand-embroidery, is used. A coarse linen with a lace border is selected by some women who do not like the over-elaborate lace cover.

The cologne flagons are of amber or crystal and there are often exquisite little figures in alabaster placed upon the dressing table by way of ornamentation.

Mending the Table Linen---Ways To Do It

OFTEN table linen is extremely attractive just when it is ready to drop to pieces. For good linen if cared for with any sort of attention becomes whiter and fairer with age. Often a table cloth that looks as if it were on its last trip from the linen closet has a season of usefulness before it.

The place where it usually gives is down the center fold. It is possible to reinforce this by placing a piece under the fold and then darning the worn cloth above over the piece. The best material with which to mend table cloths is the threads pulled from old table linen. Be sure that the threads themselves are not worn or ready to break. It is a good plan to ravel out the good piece of an old table cloth so as to get nice threads for mending other table cloths worth saving.

After a table cloth has been mended in this way it is a good plan to have it washed with a very little starch—if you are accustomed to having them come from the laundry without starch. It should then be ironed carefully, pressing down on the stitching so as to make it smooth and attractive.

The thrifty housewife does not throw the entire table cloth into the discard. She looks it over carefully. Sometimes she finds sections that are good enough to be cut off into the size of small napkins. These she has hemmed by machine. They may be used then as common table napkins. Usually one would prefer these made-over napkins to cotton napkins. In some households these made-over napkins are sent to the servant's dining room, and by using them it is never necessary to buy new napkins for the servants.

THERE are sections of the old table cloth that will not be worth working over in this way. These pieces may be cut in neat squares and piled away in a box for use on picnics. They will usually be preferred by picknickers to paper napkins, but may be discarded after once using.

The old table cloth should never be torn but should be cut with sharp scissors. Being old the threads will pull readily and it will be impossible to have an even edge if the material is torn.

Sometimes an old table cloth may be folded double and then stitched back and forth, making a fairly firm piece of double-ply damask that may prove excellent as the lining of a clothes basket or a cloth to throw over freshly baked bread or rolls to keep off the dust, until ready to be put in the bread box. A piece of damask of this sort may be useful in packing the picnic hamper or automobile lunch box.

The Time for Strawberries---Some Recipes You'll Like

STRAWBERRIES grown under glass may appeal to all of us because they are luxuries. Luxuries are always appealing just because they are luxuries. But few of us can say with sincerity that hothouse strawberries ever equal in flavor those grown out of doors.

Well, the out-of-door season for strawberries is here again, and we should make the best of it. It won't be here again for a long time, you know.

Here are some recipes for strawberry delicacies, none more delicious than plain strawberries eaten from the hull or served with cream, but all good, nevertheless.

Strawberry Pie and Tarts.

The best strawberry pie is this: Line a rather deep plate with rich paste and bake it golden brown—a sheet of waxed paper can be spread over the raw paste and the dish can be filled with rice or beans to keep the paste from puffing irregularly. Cool the crust and fill it with ripe, sweet strawberries, and pile sweetened whipped cream over them.

Another pie is made with a crust prepared in the same way, filled with strawberries that have been slightly cooked. Wash and hull them, put them in a saucepan, cover them with sugar, add a couple of tablespoons of sugar, and cook for two minutes. Pour into the shells when cold, cover with whipped cream and serve.

Small tarts can be made with either of the fillings described.

Strawberry Charlotte.

Put a layer of lady-fingers into a serving-dish, moisten with cream, cover with crushed and sweetened strawberries, pour over a boiled custard, and fill the dish with whipped cream sweetened and flavored to taste; or, pour the custard over the cake, then add the strawberries and cream. Garnish with a few berries.

Strawberry Bread Pudding.

Bread pudding (just the name) destroys some persons' appetites. So, if you wish to make an extra appeal with the very delicious pudding described, manufacture some elaborate or deceptive name for it. Strawberry pudding simply, it might be called, or it may be called strawberry sponge.

To make it, make very thin, crisp slices of toast enough to line a baking dish. Butter them thickly and line the dish. Then heap it full of sweet, washed strawberries. They must be heaped up, as they shrink when heated. Place it in the oven for half an hour—not a hot oven. By that time the fruit will be cooked and shrunken. Then chill thoroughly and serve daintily with thick cream, plain or whipped.

Strawberry Fritters.

Dip large strawberries in a thick syrup, roll in macaroon crumbs, dip in sweetened fritter batter, fry brown in deep fat, drain, sprinkle with powdered sugar, and serve.

Strawberry Nests for Children.

Select the biggest, brightest and most perfectly ripened strawberries from the basket or garden. Leave the caps on these, wash them, and place them in a circle on a green leaf in a small plate. Then fill a paper cone with powdered sugar and dump this in the center of the strawberry ring, striving to keep the sugar in cone shape after the paper is removed. Then teach the child how to lift each strawberry by the cap and dip it into the sugar. Eating the fruit in this way is a lot more fun than using a spoon, and it might be useful, sometimes, to call the dish snow mountains. Variety of mental image is the spice for child interest.

Strawberries on the Hull.

At breakfast strawberries served on the hull, if they are very large and sound, are delicious, and they are also good served in this way as a luncheon appetizer. Do not hull them nor cut off the stems, but wash them in very cold water in a colander, shaking them lightly and draining thoroughly. Then wash any green leaves you may have at hand, strawberry leaves if you live in the country, or grape leaves; or in town, any bit of greenery, like chicory or parsley. Lay this on a flat plate, heap a single service of strawberries upon it and pass with the berries powdered sugar. Geranium leaves are also pretty with the berries, just to provide the green background.

Strawberry Parfait.

Hull, wash and drain some firm, sweet berries. Press through a strainer enough to give about two-thirds of a cup of pulp. Cook together in a granite saucepan one cup granulated sugar and a half cup water until it spins a thread. Do not stir while cooking. Whip two whites of eggs stiff, then pour the hot syrup over them and continue beating until the mixture is cold. As it thickens add the crushed berries a spoon at a time. Have ready a pint of cream whipped to a solid froth, stir lightly into the egg and berry mixture, then pack in a covered mould and bury in ice and salt, equal proportions, leaving it for several hours.

Strawberry Jam.

Weigh the fruit after hulling and washing, and allow for each pound a good three-quarters of a pound of sugar. Put the fruit over the fire in the preserving kettle and cook half an hour, stirring often. Add the sugar, boil twenty minutes longer, skim thoroughly and put boiling hot in air-tight jars. Keep in a cool, dry place. A pint of red currant juice added to every four pounds of berries makes a delightful variation. Boil the currant juice with the strawberries.

Cookies on Hand; Different Kinds To Make

THE housewife who has cookies always on hand is always ready for guests. For a cooky may be appropriately served with a cup of tea, with a plate of ice cream, or with canned or fresh fruit for dessert.

Ginger Drops.

Mix thoroughly half a cup of butter, warmed until soft but not melted, the same amount of sugar, one cup of molasses, one teaspoon of cinnamon, one tablespoon of ginger, two teaspoons of soda dissolved in a cup of boiling water, two and a half cups of flour, and lastly, two eggs beaten light. Bake the drops in gem pans.

Sand Tarts.

One pound granulated sugar, one pound flour, one-half pound butter, one nutmeg grated into the dough, yolks of two eggs, white of one egg, one-half pound almonds. Blanch almonds and slice very thin. Roll the dough thin and cut into squares or diamonds with a steel cutter. Lay them in a greased pan. Wash them over with white of egg, sprinkle lightly with cinnamon and sugar, and then lay on the top the almond halves, three to each part. Hickory nuts may be substituted for the almonds. Bake quickly. These little cakes will be greatly improved if the dough is mixed and then allowed to stand overnight.

Jumbles.

One cup butter, two cups granulated sugar, one-half teaspoon soda, two eggs, juice one-half lemon, rind one lemon. Dissolve the soda in a teaspoon of hot water and mix above ingredients together well. Add a pinch of salt and flour enough to roll out well. Roll the dough out thin, cut round with hole in the center and bake in a quick oven.

Ginger Snaps.

Heat to boiling one cup of shortening (which may be half butter and half clarified drippings, or all butter if preferred), one cup molasses, two cups brown sugar, one tablespoon ginger, one tablespoon cinnamon, one scant tablespoon soda. Take from the stove. Beat well. Add two eggs and flour enough to make a stiff dough. It will takea bout six cups of flour to make the dough roll well. Stand all night and the following morning roll thin, cut with round cutter and bake in quick oven.

"Go get a pen and bottle of ink," Nelse commanded Ricardo Doyle, a half-Mexican attache of the place, who stood not far behind Gurney. When the man had brought it Cole spread his checkbook before him, dipped the pen, and looked up into Kincaid's face.

"'F I made this as much as five thousand dollars would you take it?"

Nelse stopped smiling and his face set to the emotionless inscrutability behind which a gambler hides his thoughts when high plays are afoot.

"I'll take whatever you guarantee in the presence of these witnesses will be good in the mawnin'," he replied coldly.

"But if I made it ten thousand?" leered the youth with alcoholic persistence. "'F I made it ten thousand, and she come out, four for one, I reckon I'd bust the ol' bank."

"It would be bent, but it'd take more than a forty thousand losing to plumb bust it," Nelse assured him.

"Damn 'f I don't!" cried Gurney, and scrawled the check. "Gimme big chips."

Nelse picked up the paper and read its figures aloud. "Ten thousand. You guarantee there will be enough in the mawnin' to cover it?"

"Word of honor," mumbled Gurney.

KID opened the drawer and dropped the check in. From a corner of his chip-rack he selected counters of a color and design used only on special occasions. He smoothly slid them in front of Gurney—ten of them. "One thousand apiece," he declared.

Word rustled about the room that big play was in progress at Kincaid's bank, and men who were mere spectators of the games moved in that direction. Shutter edged in fairly close, so that he was against the wall off at Kincaid's right, directly facing Gurney. The boy, he said, sat fingering the little stack of checks half-stupidly, as though now that he had them he didn't know what to do with them.

"And things got to moving kind o' fast," Shutter said. "One thing come after another so it was darned hard, afterwards, to recollect just how it all happened. I don't suppose it was more'n four or five minutes from then until the excitement was all over, but the time was sure crowded."

Shutter Snell turned his head and looked out across the gay dance floor with its swirling crowd, its bright summer dresses, its laughter, and its swift-beating rhythm and rattle of syncopated harmony. There was a slight reminiscent smile on his lips; from my side, as he turned, it seemed drowsy and absent. He was looking far beyond the modern dance floor, across twenty-five years and more of flying time, to a day when some men were honest and some were knaves in this old city that was the country's last frontier, but most men had courage. He was standing there against the gambling house wall again, his gaze bent on the cold-eyed Kincaid, the drunken boy, and the provoking, alluring, infatuating June.

I had to call him back.

"And Gurney didn't seem to know how he wanted to bet," I prodded.

"He didn't seem to know what he wanted to do with them, or whether he wanted to do anything with them," Shutter resumed, turning to face me again. "Everybody waited and let him take his time; a player that was going to lay a bet that size was entitled to think it over as much as he wanted to without anybody getting impatient. There was noise enough in the background—the click of the marbles at the wheels, loud talking and laughing out at the bar, and the music from the dance hall—but over in our corner everything was still and sort of breathless. Then Gurney looked up; he was pale and his face had lines in it, like he was just sensing that this was most of his fortune he was planning to gamble on the turn of two cards. He asked:

"'What are they, again?'

"'Ace, trey, king,' Kincaid told him.

"He stared a minute at the painted ace and king on the layout, almost under his hands, the ace on his right and the king on his left. Then he pushed his stack onto the edge of the ace, tipping it in the direction of the king.

"'Playing ace, king,' said Nelse, clearly, for the benefit of all witnesses.

"BETS go as they lay, don't they?' demanded the kid, all on edge and nervous.

"'Right,' agreed Nelse. 'Bets always go as they lay.' His fingers moved toward the deal box. 'Are we all set?'

"A little two dollar bet that a player had made on the nine to win—the nine had had just come out in the losing pile and Nelse, with the big play in his mind, had failed to see the lonesome chip—still lay where it had been placed, and June's eyes fell upon it.

"'You overlooked a sleeper, daddy,' she said, and reached across the layout to gather it in. Her body came between Nelse's eyes and Gurney's stack of chips, and in the two seconds while she was leaning over, gathering in the little chip, and settling back into her chair, the boy reached forward, lightning fast, and moved his stack across to the king, tipping it toward the ace. He threw himself far back in his chair, his hands off the table.

"'Here we go,' announced Nelse, and shoved off the top card. The one beneath it was the king. His eyes darted to the left, a hand already moving in that direction to gather in Gurney's bet, and narrowed into slits as he realized the change and what it meant.

"'That bet was ace, king,' he said harshly.

"'It was,' the boy said, just as hard and cold. 'Bets go as they lay.'"

He was sitting up straight now, his face white, but his eyes looking square into Kincaid's. I'd seen men sober up quick under a strain, but never as quick or as complete as he had.

"Let's see the next card," he demanded.

Nelse made a movement as though he would reach forward and turn the box face down, signifying that the house refused to go on with the deal—then hesitated. Deals ain't broken in the middle of the last turn. And it would be the same as confessing that he knew what the next card was going to be. The chances in a square deal were still even that the next card would be the trey.

"'You shifted the bet after I began the turn,' he said.

"'I did not,' said Gurney. 'Throw out the next card.'

"'Meaning to call me a liar,' Nelse murmured, soft voiced and deadly, and his right hand began to move toward the edge of the table where the holster hung. At which Cole came to his feet like a cat, kicking his chair back and reaching for a gun.

"'O, don't shoot!' cried June to Gurney, and threw herself across her father. This knocked his hand to one side before it got to the pistol under the table, and at the impact his chair topped backward and his knee came up sharp against the swinging holster, and I heard the gun slip out of it and go thumping to the floor.

"All during the play, ever since he brought the pen and ink, this Ricardo Doyle had been standing right back of Gurney. Now, when the boy was reaching back to his hip, the half-breed grabbed his arm. Cole swung a short left hand punch to his jaw, which landed glancing and didn't damage Ricardo none, but it made him let go, and Gurney got to his pistol, swinging around to face Kincaid again. Whereupon Ricardo, behind him now, whipped out a knife.

"So there was where, of course, I had to get into it, my boss being unarmed and a player starting trouble, and I got out my gun as fast as I knew how and took a shot at Gurney."

SHUTTER paused, wagging his head regretfully.

"You shot Gurney!" I exclaimed.

"I shot at Gurney," Shutter corrected me. "I never was more ashamed in my life. It wasn't more'n seven or eight yards, and I missed him."

Again Shutter shook his head, and the note in his voice was rueful and apologetic:

"Missed him by a plumb foot. And the bullet happens to get Ricardo square in the wrist—of the hand that's holding the knife. So he's out of it. And, being flustered at missing thataway, I suppose, I fumble my gun getting ready to shoot again, and before I can do it somebody has my shooting arm, and I'm out of it, too. And there is Gurney, with his back up against the wall to the left of the bank, swinging a gun so it covers Nelse, and Nelse's assistants that are coming a-running from one place and another, and whomever else it may concern, and Nelse, who has pushed June to one side, puts his hands up over his heads just as he might if robbers had got the drop on his house.

"'S it's a holdup, is it?' he says. 'All right. Come get what's in the drawer.'

"'It's no holdup, Mr. Kincaid,' Cole told him. 'These gentlemen are witnesses that I didn't make a move until after you had begun to reach under the table. I don't want what's in the drawer unless it belongs to me, and I won't know whether it belongs to me or not until you throw out another card. All I want is to see whether the ace or the trey is under that king.'

"So Nelse sees, of course, that the game is played out. He's got to turn that card—or go out of business in San 'Ntonio. He takes his eyes off Gurney and looks around at the players and spectators, all rigid, waiting developments.

"'Gentlemen,' he said. 'You know the rules. If this man moved his bet after I began to turn the cards his money's mine. If he didn't he's got a right to have it lay where it is until we see what the next card is. I believe he shifted his chips after I touched the box. I still believe so—but men have been wrong. Mr. Apgate.' He spoke to a man that had been looking on, not far from Gurney. 'Did you see the play?'

"'Yes, but this isn't my business,' Apgate said.

"Kincaid nodded agreement with this. I sure admired the man's nerve. He had lost, and he knew he'd lost, and here he was getting himself into a position to stand right with the crowd when the thing was over, as cool as though the money involved was a Mexican dollar.

"'Not unless both sides ask you to settle it,' he said. 'That's right, of course. He looked about at the crowd again. 'I'm willing,' he told everybody, 'to leave this to Mr. Apgate. He's a square man; everybody knows it. Whatever's right is right. If he decides against me the bet lays and we go on with the turn.' He shifted his eyes to Gurney, his thumb on the hammer of his six-shooter, alert, standing there against the wall.

"GURNEY knew Apgate. Everybody did. There wasn't an old cattleman in town had a better reputation for being absolutely on the level.

"'I'll leave it to Mr. Apgate,' the boy agreed shortly. 'He'll be doing me a favor if he will settle it.'

"'We both ask you,' said Kincaid.

"Apgate spoke to the players. 'Does any other man with a bet down object?' he asked. 'I won't horn in on this unless everybody interested wants me to.'

"Two or three spoke up and told him to go ahead and be the umpire, and nobody had anything to say to the contrary.

"'Gurney had finished moving his bet and got his hands clear before you touched the box,' Apgate told Nelse.

"Nelse shrugged his shoulders. The expression of his face didn't change. 'You can put that pistol up,' he said to Cole. 'The bet goes as she lays, and we'll look at the next card.' With fingers that never trembled he slid the king out of the box, and it sounded as though everybody in that end of the room let out a sigh he'd been holding back for five minutes as they saw the ace lying underneath it.

"'The turn comes king, ace,' called Kincaid, exactly as if nothing unusual had happened.

"He paid the smaller bets that won and gathered in the chips that lost. Then out of the drawer he got Gurney's check and laid it beside his stack of ten chips, which he picked up. 'Four for one; forty thousand dollars,' he said. He went down inside his shirt and brought out a package of bills, ten hundreds, fourteen five hundreds, and seven one thousands. 'Fifteen thousand,' he said, as he counted them out in front of Gurney. 'No use digging into what is in the various drawers; it would be only chicken feed, and, anyway, we may need it for settling up with the others. I'll give you my check for twenty-five thousand. It's on the McCluskey bank. I guarantee you'll find cash there to cover it when you take it there in the mawnin'.'

"Nobody doubted he was speaking the truth, of course. If he didn't make good his gambling house days in South Texas would be over. Gurney took the check when Nelse had written it, tore up his own, stuffed the fifteen thousand dollars in bills into a pocket, and got ready to leave, all without speaking.

"June, all this time, had been standing beside her father, her face colorless, only her eyes moving, shifting from one to the other of the men as they spoke or acted. She looked down at Nelse, now, and he looked back at her with that sneer of his. His lips formed a word.

"'Hell cat!' they said. He nodded twice, very slightly, and added another: 'Correct.'

"She leaned over and spoke swiftly, for his ears alone:

"'You made me do it.'

"He nodded agreement with this, too. 'All right,' he told her. 'I know when a hand is beat. Give him my compliments and tell him he's a damn good actor. . . . Will you be dropping in?'

"'Do you want me to?'

"'Why not?' He half smiled, sort of twisted. 'I never reniged on taking medicine yet. You never thought I was a short sport, did you? Besides—' and he whispered something to her I couldn't hear. It was months—I don't know but years—before I ever knew what it was.

"It made June almost laugh. 'That's fair,' she said, and with the laugh in her eyes she went over to where Cole stood waiting by the door, and they went out of the room together."

SHUTTER Snell lighted a fresh cigarette and sat back, his gaze roving the roof garden. In a maze of dancers the girl that I had especially noticed when she arrived with a party—the girl with brown hair and eyes and the marvelous complexion and mischievous mouth—came whirling in the embrace of an ardent youth close to our table, and her glance fell upon Shutter. She gave him a dazzling smile of recognition. "Hello," she cried, after the friendly fashion of an old and intimate comrade, and went spinning away. Shutter beamed after her.

"Isn't she pretty?" he murmured.

"A corker," I agreed. "Who is she?"

"That's Mattie Lou Gurney—June's youngest girl. Haven't seen much of her the last three, four years; she's been up east to college. Her picture was in the paper last Sunday. Maybe you didn't see it: it was on the society page. She's one of these here dee-bu-tantys. I reckon Cole and Miz Gurney must be in town from the ranch. They've got a big city house up on Laurel Heights. Seen enough dancing? Suppose we drift along."

"Wait a minute," I said, harking back. "What was it Nelse Kincaid whispered to June that almost made her laugh?"

Shutter grinned.

"He said: 'Besides, I'd like to borrow about ten thousand dollars of that roll back from him tomorrow. The bank is practically broke.'" you've got to help, Jemima; and if I'm too forward in calling you 'Jemima,' then tell me so; but 'tis a very beautiful name and I'm very wishful to call you by it."

"My few friends call me 'Jem,'" she answered; but he said he thought 'Jemima' better, because it was like the notes a graybird begins his song with. And then he told her what he'd been up to.

"I've fallen in with Henry," he said, "and it's very easy to see that he's a haunted man. In fact, more than one at Thorpe marks it and reckon that too much religion is turning his head. Of course I didn't whisper there was a very different reason for his wild eyes and wild speech, but I went to the man himself, so humble as a worm, and told him that things had happened to me and I'd seen a light and hoped to turn over a new leaf and mend my ways. And that's true as Gospel, Jemima, for I fully intend to do so after hearing you on the subject: But I didn't mention that you was the Light: I just said I should be very wishful to hear Henry, because he was well known to be a great saver of souls. He shivered and gasped when I said so, but he made an effort to listen and I asked him if he'd come some night after dark and have a good, long tell with me and put me on the narrow road.

"'I want you to be quiet about it,' I said, 'and I ain't going to the penitent bench at your tin chapel, nor nothing like that; but if you'll give me an hour on Tuesday night in Thorpe Wood, out of the way of prying eyes, then you may very like save me alive. 'Tis a great feather in any man's cap to save his neighbor's soul,' I said, 'and I'll give you the chance to do it, Henry Bird. And I'll pray you'll see your way.'

"HE stared and he looked up at the sky and quoted Scripture. I can't mind all he said, but one thing I did mark. 'He saved others, Himself he cannot save,' the blasphemous man gasped out, and then he turned his great dog's eyes on me and told me that he'd do what he could on my account. I thanked him most hearty and said I'd be up at the Devil's Hunting Horn o' Tuesday night at seven o'clock—that's tonight.

"'There's some be feared of the place,' I said, 'but not such a righteous man as you nor yet such a Godless creature as me. For wickedness and goodness be often alike in braveness. I'll await you, and I'm very hopeful you'll larn me some good larning, for I'm willing to do better, and I well know you're the man to guide me if you will.'

"I could see his mind working as if his forehead was made of glass, but I'd got him catched, you see, and though he did make one effort to fix another meeting place I wouldn't have it, but said it must be there or nowhere. 'If you can put me right, then I'll come to your chapel later on,' I promised him, 'and be a very good advertisement for your faith, because what I say I sticks to; but I must have a tell first where there won't come none between us, and that's the very place. And why not?'

"He had nothing to say, but he looked in the sky again and he was torn in two about it. At last, however, he ordained to come, because a soul was at stake, and I believe he will come, Jemima. And if he don't, then we'll get him some other way. But for the minute what you've got to do is this. You've got to drink your tea, then you've got to come up to the Hunting Horn along with me. And I'll open the door and let you in. Then you go up to the top and wear this old, white, rubber raincoat of mine and stand at the parapet and look down when you see me and Henry sitting below. He'll damn soon catch sight of you and then we'll see how he shapes."

Jemima's eyes grew round.

"You want him to think I'm dead, Jacob?"

"He thinks that already. He believes that he's a murderer, and now his fit of madness is over there's no doubt remorse is eating the wretch alive. But when he sees your ghostey, then I daresay you'll feel you've had a revenge worth talking about, and after that, when the beastly man is at his last gasp, you may or may not decide to come down and show mercy. But that's for you to say; and if you prefer that you want his neck broke, or anything like that, I shall be only too pleased to oblige you."

Well, Jemima hadn't much time to think about it, and on the whole, though fearful, she felt that Jacob had hit on a clever way to make Henry's punishment fit his crime. So she went through the dusk along with him and put on his white coat, that had a ghostly sort of gleam in the dark, and got in the tower and climbed out to the flat roof and waited. Then Jacob heaved up the wood and stones again and was sitting smoking his pipe so calm as a reformed sinner could be, when Henry Bird come along.

Clegg could see by his eyes, like a frightened horse's, and the sweat on his brow that it had cost him a parlous struggle to come; and first thing Henry did was to ask Jacob to walk in the wood, because he said the sound of the Hunting Horn distracted his mind. But the horn was blowing very low that night and only off and on, so Clegg thought they would bide there, and invited t'other to say the word in season and tell him what he did ought to do to be saved.

WITH a mighty effort Henry began his preaching, and he was just forgetting his own horrid crime for a minute and warming to his work, when he lifted his eyes to the tower and saw, so white as an owl, a woman's shape standing motionless there with her hands lifted, as though calling on heaven. Jemima hadn't no need to make a sound, for the sight of her was more'n enough—as Jacob knew it would be.

Henry crumpled like a dead stick and his words stuck in his throat. He fell, as though he'd been hit over the back of the head and dropped at Jacob's feet, where they was walking up and down and clutched hold of his leg with one hand and pointed up at the tower with the other.

"God's justice! What's that?" he yelled out. And Clegg looked where he pointed, but shook his head and lied.

"I don't see nothing," he said.

"On the tower, looking down at us!"

"Nothing there,' vowed Henry. "What do you think you see?

And Jemima stood a few seconds more, but she knew by the scream that Henry had marked her, and then she sank slowly out of sight.

Henry Bird collapsed alotgether and flung himself on the ground, while the other man carried on the farce.

"There's more here than meets the eye, seemingly," he said. "Anyway, there's more than meets my eye; but if you saw something 'twas either a living creature or else a ghost, and whichever it may be I'll damn soon find out."

He ran to the tower, pulled down the wood and flung open the door for Jemima to walk out.

But while she and Jacob had arranged the next scene very careful, they'd forgot there was another party to it. And he didn't fall in with their plans by no means, for instead of biding where he was and facing Jemima when she came from the tower, as they expected, the love-mad man found he'd had enough. Indeed, he rose up and fled so soon as Jacob left him and never saw Jemima again. Thus he was gone when she came forth, and as there certainly weren't no catching him that night, the woman went home with Jacob to Clegg's mother. And the next day she was back in Thorpe with her secret still hidden, until that happened which blazed all abroad and ended the fearful affair and made a nine days' wonder for us all.

For now Henry Bird did something more out of the common, and it was the turn of Jacob and Jemima to be a good bit surprised at his next step. Jemima had meant, if he'd only listened, to tell the man how God Almighty had saved him from being a murderer and so on, and there's no doubt, if Henry could have waited and gone through with it, she'd have forgiven him, because out of his evil actions had sprung good for her. But Bird little knew he'd seen a living woman. When Jacob opened the tower the other believed his number was up no doubt and his crime to be discovered; so his mind broke down under the strain of his own dreadful actions and he thought the time was come to pay for 'em. Therefore he went straight home and cut his throat in the shed where he kept his bicycle, and there he was found afore noon next day.

It all come out then, and a few went so far as to say that Jemima never ought to have been so fearfully revenged on the man, though most people was glad to believe her when she said she had meant to let him off and forgive him his sins.

THE affair cast a gloom on us all and gave the unrighteous a good opportunity to scoff, but 'twas brought in "suicide whilst of unsound mind"—a very right and proper verdict—and it was just another case of crossed love bringing out hidden evil and proving how nature may be stronger even than religion when there's a woman in the balance.

The only bright thing about it were that the minister, a very large-minded man and a working Christian, didn't deny Henry proper burial: and the other good thing was that Jacob Clegg, owing to his love affair, was reformed afore the nation and turned over a new leaf and did his duty to his neighbor from that day forward. You see Jemima, when he offered for her, granted that she loved him very much indeed, but she demanded a clear year afore she said "yes" or "no," which, seeing Jacob's shady past, weren't an unreasonable bargain. But he rose to the trial and proved once more the power of a good woman on a tricky nature. In fact, Jacob was properly born again, to his mother's joy and the people's agreeable surprise. And it weren't a case of virtue being its own reward, neither, for he got Jemima all right, and he never looked back but made a rare husband and loving father.

For love will save a bad man as easy as 'a can wreck a good one, according to the mysteries of human nature, as be like the peace of God Himself, past all understanding.

house visits with the most exquisite and dainty wares and there was nothing in this episode to arouse my suspicions. The woman told me that at her house she had some even more beautiful lace, which she would be glad to have me see, and invited me to accompany her there. Not having the least idea that this was a carefully laid plot to entrap me and get me into the power of the Turk, I went with her. As soon as I entered the door, however, it was slammed to and bolted behind me and I knew I was a prisoner.

"There was the old Turk and on the table in front of him was a formidable looking document. He was vrey kind and tried not to frighten me, and I have every reason to believe that he loved me very much. He begged me to leave my husband and swore that I signed the document saying that I would renounce him. I should not return home.

"He insisted that I was first of all to go to his home, where he promised that no harm should befall me. Terrified beyond description, I tried not to show how frightened I was, but my heart was beating fast and I could feel myself trembling. Then, because I was helpless, I said I would go with him to his home, determining at the same time to take the first chance of escape that offered. We drove in a coupe, and on the journey I tried to jump out, but he held me fast.

"AT last we arrived at the house which stood in the center of a vast park and was quite the most wonderful place I have ever been in. I knew the man was fabulously rich, but the magnificent house to which I was taken surpassed anything I had seen.

"His mother and sister were on the 'harem lek' side, and he wanted to send for them. It was then that I discovered that he already had three wives. Pleading a headache, I said that I would meet his family later, I requested permission to retire.

"A chamber was assigned to me, and a serving woman was posted outside the door. This palace was a huge, one-story affair; with little latticed windows. It was something of a drop from mine to the ground, but I made up my mind to attempt to escape in this way as soon as it was dark. About nine in the evening, I asked the woman outside my door if she could fetch me a dressing gown as I wished to go to bed. She had no suspicion and went. Immediately she had done so, I quietly opened the lattice and jumped out into the garden. I came down jarred but not hurt, and, picking myself up, ran into the depths of the wooded park. There I crouched in the bushes, and though I could hear that search was being made for me, my hiding place was not discovered.

"UNTIL daybreak I lay hidden, then, finding my way to the rear wall, I succeeded in climbing it and was free. For an hour and a half I ran for my life, for our villa was several miles away. I arrived all but exhausted. My husband was distracted at my absence and was on the point of going to the police when I staggered in, and half-past seven in the morning.

"When he learned what had befallen me, he took swift action. With a loaded revolver in his pocket he started in search of the man who had kidnaped me. Boiling with rage he arrived at the place, only to learn that the Turk had left Constantinople in the early hours of the morning.

"About a fortnight afterwards I received a letter posted in a town in Asia Minor, and in it there was this ominous passage:

"'I shall never give up, for I mean to have you. This is not good-by, but only au revoir!' However, I have never seen or heard of my determined lover since, and sincerely hope that I never shall."

The conversation now turned to Madame de Bonkovska's interesting artistic career.

"When I consented to marry my husband," she said, "I made one condition—that I should be allowed to train as a singer and to appear in public. My husband promised, somewhat reluctantly, and soon after our marriage I began to have singing lessons. It was in February, 1916, that I made my debut as an operatic prima donna, singing Marguerite to the Faust of the well-known Dimitri Smirnoff. This was at the Theater des Varietes in Constantinople, and next day the critics were most kind.

"Later I went to Vienna and sang for Felix Weingartner. You know him well in America, is it not so? He, too, was pleased with me and engaged me to sing in 'Tosca' at the Volksopera. You will know it!—how so you say?—'made good!' —when I tell you that at the end of the first performance I was called in front of the curtain thirteen times. Mais non, I did not think the number unlucky! And next day The Vienna Mercur, which does not easily praise, told its readers that I was 'a great Tosca.' Since then I have also appeared in Sofia, and, of course, in Constantinople many, many times. My favorite role? It is Carmen, but I am, too, 'Madame Butterfly' and Santuzza in 'Cavalleria' and sing many other roles.

"PERHAPS when I have finished in England I may visit America," Madame de Bonkovska added. "It is my great hope to go and that Americans may think well of me, for already I have sung to many of your countrymen in Turkey. And I have sung on your battleships when they came to Constantinople after the war. Mais oui, I sang and what applause they gave me—those 'gobs' and their smart officers! Apropos, permit that I show you!"

Thus saying, the diva proudly produced a letter of introduction, addressed "To Whom It May Concern." This letter, written on the stationery of Robert college, Constantinople, was signed by Elizabeth Dodge Huntington, the wife of the American director of that well-known institution. It stated that Madame de Bonkovska's willing participation in many entertainments given in the Turkish capital for American service men won her the gratitude of the entire American colony. It wound up by describing the singer as "worthy of introduction to the highest musical circles."

"THE Americans in Constantinople have made a little colony for themselves at Babek, up in the mountains around the town," Madame explained. "I spent five months there as the guest of different families last year and it was like being in another world. What homes, what conveniences, above all, what food! While there I gave six concerts in aid of the fund which your countrymen raised for the war sufferers—the rest—and at the end they gave a big dinner for me at the American college. It is a happy memory for me, that dinner! The tables, they were ravissant, and in the corner of each name-card was a little bar of music from one or another of the operas in which I have sung.

"But if I go to America," she added, "I must have a companion, for it is not yet convenable for a Turkish lady is not yet convenablue for a Turkash lady to travel alone. Me, I should not have been able to come to London had it not been that a friend of my husband's was coming here. And I must learn English, too, for they tell me that your countrymen, like those in this country, prefer, when one sings, to understand the words! However, I am getting on. At my first concert at the Aeolian hall I sang one little English song, though when I came here, three weeks ago, I knew hardly one single word."

the burdensome cloak and found him a man.

They liked him because he was a sportsman. They liked his smile. They liked the way he wore his clothes. They decided that he wore his clothes well—so he passed with them. His hat fitted down just close enough to his ears and there was just the faint suggestion of wearing it at an angle. Exactly the flapper's idea of how a hat should be worn.

Then, his collars fitted him. They were just tight enough so that his neck looked well in them. Flappers are so particular. His coats fitted his shoulders and his trousers' cuffs were right. All these things American girls found out about him on his brief visit to the United States.

Wales is an attractive boy. He wears his clothes well. He is a sportsman and a bit of a democrat. The American girl decides these things about Wales. Perhaps she says him the greatest of all tributes that have been accorded him.

Circus Continued

Designed in the HORTON STUDIOS INCORPORATED CLEVELAND © 1922

WHAT circus satisfies without a sideshow, where you'll find
Odd sights and feats by folk more odd of every land and kind?
So circusday in Roll-i-Vill would never be complete Without its sideshow giving to each Roll-i-Child a treat.

Here Bolivar, the Elephant With More Than Human Knowledge,
Displays a brand of learning that they do not teach in college.
There Fatima, of oriental guise, presents her pets
Of serpent kind, and for her act a warm reception gets.

And Bombo charms a cobra with his wailing pipes of reed,
While there a merry clown cavorts upon a grotesque steed.
So now, as ends the afternoon, the Roll-i-Children go
To watch the tiger at its meal before the evening show.

Cut out each picture around the entire circle. Next cut carefully with a knife along the outline of the picture ABOVE the dotted line, thus forming two rollers. To increase the life of the toy, cut a cardboard circle, bevel it to fit the paper, and paste the paper on the cardboard.

By Marie Rich

ONCE upon a time, in the fall of the year, when the persimmons were golden yellow, and Tom Turkey strutted about unsuspectingly in the man's barnyard, with his tail spread out like a fan, Polly Partridge went walking, and with her went all the little Partridges, skipping along through the high grass, chattering gaily with one another.

Pretty soon they came upon Johnnie Squirrel, who was frisking about among the dry leaves hunting for acorns, and Polly Partridge stopped for a chat with him.

"Look here," said Johnnie Squirrel, when he saw them. "Aren't you afraid to be out, Polly Partridge? The man is out hunting with his great, black gun, and I heard him say this morning he was going to bring home a Partridge for his dinner."

"What ever shall I do?" cried Polly Partridge in dismay. "I shall have to hide the little Partridges until he is gone."

Just about that time they saw Pointer Pup coming up over the hill, and behind him came the man with his great, black gun.

"There he comes now!" cried Johnnie Squirrel, and he scampered off as fast as ever he could, and disappeared in a hole high up in the oak tree.

"Here," cried Polly Partridge to the little Partridges. "Lie down on the ground! Quick! Now be very quiet, and I will try to make the man go the other way."

SO ALL the little Partridges squatted down in the long grass, so that their speckled brown coats looked almost like the ground itself, and were as still as still, while Polly Partridge flew over and dropped down almost in front of the man and Pointer Pup.

"I will make him think I am lame," said Polly Partridge to herself, "and maybe he will try to catch me."

So she started limping along in front of the man, and pretty soon he saw her.

"Ah," said the man. "A wounded partridge. I will catch it and take it home alive." And he reached over and tried to catch Polly Partridge, but Polly Partridge flew a few feet, and then ran limping along in front of him again, and each time he tried to catch her she flew a little further away from the spot where the little Partridges lay hiding, and the man followed her. Over the hill they went, until they were quite out of sight, and then Johnnie Squirrel came quickly out of his hole, and scampered down the oak tree to where the little Partridges lay.

PRETTY soon Polly Partridge came flying back as fast as ever she could.

"You can come out now," she cried to the little Partridges. "The man has gone. What a stupid man he was, to be sure." And she began to laugh.

"But how did you get him to go away?" asked Johnnie Squirrel looking very much perplexed. "For the man is very wise and Pointer Pup is a great hunter."

"Oh, that was easy enough," said Polly Partridge, as she counted the little Partridges to see that they were all there. "I pretended I was lame, and when the man tried to catch me I flew ahead of him a little way, and whenever he started to turn back I let him almost catch me, until he followed me all the way over the hill. Then I hid myself in the long grass, and while he was hunting around for me on the ground, I flew away, and here I am."

AND Polly Partridge, Johnnie Squirrel and all the little Partridges laughed and laughed as hard as ever they could, at the good joke that Polly Partridge had played on the man.

"I think I will play that joke on him again," chuckled Polly Partridge to herself, as she led the little Partridges home.

And she did, too—and does to this day, for whenever the man comes too close to the little Partridges, Polly Partridge plays lame. And the man must indeed be a very stupid fellow, for he always follows her over the hill.

A Bible Talk

The Lost Bible Found

TEXT OF TODAY'S BIBLE TALK BY MR. BRYAN
(II Chronicles xxxiv:14-16, 29-32)

And when they brought out the money that was brought into the house of the Lord, Hilkiah the priest found a book of the law of the Lord given by Moses.

And Hilkiah answered and said to Shaphan the scribe, I have found the book of the law in the house of the Lord. And Hilkiah delivered the book to Shaphan.

And Shaphan carried the book to the king, and brought the king word back again, saying, All that was committed to thy servants, they do it.

Then the king sent and gathered together all the elders of Judah and Jerusalem.

And the king went up into the house of the Lord, and all the men of Judah, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and the priests, and the Levites, and all the people, great and small: and he read in their ears all the words of the book of the covenant that was found in the house of the Lord.

And the king stood in his place, and made a covenant before the Lord, to walk after the Lord, and to keep his commandments, and his testimonies, and his statutes, with all his heart, and with all his soul, to perform the words of the covenant which are written in this book.

And he caused all that were present in Jerusalem and Benjamin to stand to it. And the inhabitants of Jerusalem did according to the covenant of God, the God of their fathers.

THIS is the age of discovery. Archeologists, inventors, chemists, astronomers are continually bringing forth new wonders for us to contemplate. Within the span of a few years we have been given the automobile, the flying machine, the submarine, the wireless telegraph, the radio telephone, and from ugly and apparently useless substances come forth, under the magic touch of the chemist, wondrous colors to make brilliant the garments of the world and medicines to heal the sick. Discovery is piled upon discovery in such rapidity that oftentimes we are bewildered thereby.

But wonderful and far-reaching in their effects on life as these discoveries are, you will have to turn to the 34th chapter of Second Chronicles to learn of what is still, and always will remain, one of the greatest discoveries in history.

For twenty-five hundred years ago, in the reign of Josiah, king of Judah, the Bible, that had been lost, was found again—the "book of the law of the Lord given by Moses."

Just how and for how long the Book that has shaped the destiny of the world was lost is not definitely known, but the fact that in the course of the history of the Jewish kingdom it was lost is proof that it was neglected. If it had been in daily use, if the people had shaped their lives according to its precepts, its disappearance would have been at once noted and its recovery soon announced. But the Jews were led by rulers who oscillated from fidelity to God to subservience to heathen gods, and the punishment that follows wrongdoing carried many captive into foreign lands. And some time during these black years the "book of the law of the Lord given by Moses," the Bible, was lost.

It was during this dismal time in the history of the Jews that Josiah, who was the son of a wicked father, began his reign in Jerusalem at eight years of age; when 16 he was only 16 he sought after "the God of David." He is one of the many illustrations in the Bible of early piety. We are not informed as to the influences that moulded him, but as he could not have been the pupil of his father the honor falls to his mother, Jedidah, or to some of the priestly class.

Before taking up his work that led to the Bibles' recovery, it may be well to observe that a large percentage of those who enter upon a Christian life begin young. There are several reasons for this.

First, the environment of a Christian home creates conditions in which faith germinated. The child, sooner than many suppose, finds its heart taking hold upon faith in God and in Christ.

Faith is a much earlier growth than reason. According to law, the young man is presumed to be immature in his reason. According to law, the young man is presumed to be immature in his reason until he is 21. No evidence of precocity can overthrow this presumption. The calendar is the only proof that the courts will receive. Until a boy is 21 his deed is not valid and his vote is not received. While maturity in woman is presumed to arrive a little earlier than in man, it, too, is calculated by years; differences that manifest themselves in individuals are not taken into consideration.

With faith it is different. Faith in the parent springs up early in the child and this faith naturally broadens into faith in others until the child, long before it reaches legal maturity, can worship God and give its love to Christ in return for Christ's love.

THE second reason is to be found in the fact that every child passes through a period of rebellion, latent or expressed, against parental authority. The prodigal son gives us an exhibition of this rebellion carried to the point of separation from home.

At this period any theory that relieves the child of a sense of responsibility is more attractive than it is earlier or later, and, therefore, many are led away from faith in God. Some afterward return as intellectual prodigal sons; some wander off into a starless night even though they recognize, as Romanes did, the awful contrast between the "hallowed creed" of their youth and "the lonely mystery of existence" as they find it to be when they abandon belief in God.

Fortunate for the child if its religious faith becomes firmly rooted before it encounters the strong temptations that come as it approaches manhood or womanhood. No one who has come in contact with shipwrecked lives will take the responsibility of advising a child to postpone a confession of its faith when its heart is ready to make a confession.

At the age of 26 Josiah began to purge his country of every form of idolatry that had become rife throughout its borders during the brief reign of his wicked father and the long reign of his grandfather; at 26 he began to repair Solomon's temple, that had been allowed to fall into decay while the idolatrous held their revels and orgies and human sacrifices. It was at this time that Hilkiah, the high priest, unearthed the lost word of God, what is supposed to have been the Pentateuch.

When the book was brought to the king there was great rejoicing. He gathered together all the elders of Judah and Jerusalem and then he brought to the house of the Lord all the inhabitants, the priests and the people. Standing in his place, he read to them "all the words of the book of the covenant that was found in the house of the Lord;" and he "made a covenant before the Lord to walk after the Lord and to keep his commandments and his testimonies and his statutes with all his heart, and with all his soul" to perform the words of the covenant that were written in the book.

He not only made a promise for himself, but he brought his people into the covenant with him, and they "did according to the covenant of God, the God of their fathers."

Several of those who write upon the lessons that the Bible teaches have found in this account of the loss and recovery of the Bible a suggestion as to the numerous ways in which the Word of God is lost now, for it goes without saying that an individual, as well as a nation, may lose the Bible, and lose it today as well as in the past.

The reason is not the same in all cases, anything that is substituted for the Bible will serve to banish it from the thought. If one obeys the first commandment, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me," he will be anxious to keep in touch with God's will that he may obey it. If he worships any of the many false gods, he will feel little interest in the Word of God. In fact, he will deliberately avoid it because its language will accuse him.

IT is hardly necessary to say that there are as many false gods today as there were in the days of the Hebrew kings, or that the temptation to worship these gods is as strong today as then.

We have the god of gold, worshipped by those who put money above everything else; the god of fashion, worshipped by those who long for distinction in the social world; the god of fame, before which those prostrate themselves who set their heart upon the distinctions that can be won in any department of activity.

We have the god of ease, which those worship who think only of food and bodily comfort—who eat and eat, and sleep and sleep and sleep, and then rise up to eat and eat again.

We have the god of intellect, worshipped by those who, putting the brain above the heart, and reason above faith, proudly follow the wanderings of the mind instead of humbly trusting the Word of God.

We have the travel god, worshipped by those who develop the wanderlust and associate with rare and unusual things until the little tasks that make up everyday life pall upon them.

We have the god of chance, worshipped by those who are bent on getting something for nothing; the god of passion, worshipped by those who subordinate the mind and the soul to the appetites of the body; the rum god, in whose worship Americans used to spend more than on education and religion combined; and, last and most deceptive of all, the great god Self, of which all the other false gods are but masks.

It is self that obscures the Creator—self that is puffed up with its own importance and seeks to make the world subservient to it; self that could not live an hour if it had to give its attention to its own vital organs. One would die of exhaustion if he had to swing the pendulum of the heart or pump the bellows of the lungs or direct the digestive organs in their unceasing work.

But the Heavenly Father has provided that man can live without conscious effort in order that man may devote his thought to God's work and to the welfare of his fellows. And yet, many give to their Maker no thought at all and are indifferent to His revealed word.

I venture to say that the Bible has done more to determine the civilization of today than all other books combined.

It gives the conception of God entertained by the civilized world; it gives us an infallible guide—a lamp unto our feet and a light unto our path.

It gives us the only authentic account of Christ, whose life on earth began with a virgin birth and ended in a resurrection—the greatest fact of history and the growing figure of all time.

The world never needed the Bible more than now; it needs a personal God, near enough to hear prayer and willing to answer; it needs an inspired Word of God; it needs the full-statured Christ of whom the Bible tells.

SPEED UP!

Reports from the national capital indicate that, regardless of the relative merits of Senator New or of his recent victorious opponent, former Senator Beveridge, the outcome of the Hoosier primary election last Tuesday will have a good effect in at least causing congress and the administration to speed up action on pending legislation and toward putting into operation certain promised alministrative policies that have been hanging fire for many months.

John Gleissner, a leading political commentator, said in a recent dispatch from Washington that republican leaders in congress admittedly are "disturbed by the election in Indiana," and that, spurred by the handwriting revealed by the political downfall of their colleague, they already have begun to "put forth efforts to expedite legislation in an effort to allay what is interpreted as popular dissatisfaction and desire for a change."

Those G. O. P. "old guardsmen" fear, according to this correspondent, that "the wholly unexpected defeat of Senator New . . . may be indicative of a widespread unrest which will express itself at the polls in November and weaken the hold of the party on the country."

Their fears undoubtedly are well founded; and, while it probably is too late to allay the "popular dissatisfaction and desire for a change," or to make amends for republican failure to keep faith with the people, it is high time that something was done to stimulate congress and the administration to action!

Ever since the republicans came into control of the government on March 4, 1921, the administration has been continuously telling the people what it was going to do in the way of reorganizing the various executive departments, by which it promised to relieve the taxpayers of millions of dollars of unnecessary expense; but as yet it has done nothing to that end—except talk!

For more than a year tariff legislation, in keeping with the republican theory of "protection," has been under consideration by congress; but the tariff bill, apparently, is still a long way from enactment.

For months and months house and senate have been discussing soldier bonus legislation; but there is still no bonus act on the statute books, the bill remaining an apparently never-ending live topic of "debate."

The Muscle Shoals question has been pressing for final action since last fall; but it is still unsettled, congress being willing enough to talk about it, but obviously afraid to act.

So it goes with the whole list of measures, of greater or lesser importance, which have been, and still are, consuming the time and attention of our public servants in Washington.

The truth of the matter probably is that the G. O. P. leaders purposely have delayed final action upon each of these matters of major importance, fearing its political effect upon the country, and considering it more expedient to keep the masses in a state of hopeful suspense until after the fall elections than to give them an opportunity to appraise republican rule in the light of experience.

In other words, they are striving to serve political ends rather than the public welfare, and they have deemed it safer to be judged on the strength of promises than on a record of performance.

But it is evident that the Indiana election has set them to thinking in another direction!

The repudiation of Senator New, a member of the G. O. P. "inner circle," and close personal, as well as political, friend of the president, gave evidence that what the people want and demand is action, and that they are weary of procrastination and needless interminable "debates" of questions that involve simply the fulfillment of long overdue campaign pledges!

It is to be hoped that the Indiana election will be followed by a general speeding up of the machinery of government.

Whatever is to be done about departmental reorganization, whether it will work out for the best interests of the government or otherwise, let it be done!

If congress and the administration are going to do anything about Muscle Shoals, let them go ahead and do it!

If a soldier bonus bill and a high protective tariff measure are to be enacted, let us have them.

Why wait indefinitely?

The country wants to know what the republican party really intends to do—and the sooner the program, whatever it may be, is put into operation, the better.

Anything, for that matter, is preferable to this wearisome uncertainty and suspense.

SPREADING THE LIGHT.

Modeled after the plan of the fund for financing the education of deserving young men in the University of Georgia, established many years ago by former Governor Joseph E. Brown, the Knights Templar of the United States have just voted to establish a similar fund. The proceeds will be applied to spreading the light of learning among boys and girls, regardless of nationality or creed and irrespective of the lodge affiliations of their parents, everywhere in the country.

The plan was proposed by J. K. Orr, of Atlanta, the retiring Most Excellent Grand Master of the Knights Templar branch of the Masonic order, at its thirty-fifth conclave, held at New Orleans recently, and unanimously approved by the assembled delegates.

Under it each member of the Knights Templar, of whom there are now 400,000, will contribute one dollar annually to a revolving fund to be administered exclusively for educational purposes, the various states sharing pro rata in accordance with their respective Knights Templar membership.

One-half of the total contributions, or $200,000 each year, according to the present membership of the order, will be placed in a permanent endowment fund, and probably in the years to come that money will be used for the founding of Knights Templar universities in various parts of the country.

The other one-half of the fund, with accrued interest, will be loaned to young men and young women with hungry minds but who are without means for financing their own education.

Distribution of this money will begin in 1924, and in the meantime all details of the plan according to which it is to be administered will be carefully worked out.

This is in no sense a charitable service, for each recipient will be under obligations to return every dollar that he receives; but, as under the Joseph E. Brown fund plan, his loan will enable him to acquire an education, the money to be repaid out of his earnings from the activities for which his education will have equipped him.

Therefore, instead of being a charity, this splendid plan of the Knights Templar contemplates the highest and noblest form of philanthropy and public service, and a purely businesslike investment in young manhood and young womanhood—the undeveloped human resources of the country.

It is an enterprise that merits the unreserved commendation of all good citizens; and in embarking upon it the Knights Templar have set an example which other great secret and benevolent organizations might follow with distinct glorification of themselves and benefit to future generations.

WAY OF THE WEATHER.

There is need for more and wiser weather-philosophers, who don't go into hysterics because they are April-fooled by predictions gone wrong, and who have no quarrel with a friendly and heart-warming fire in May.

But from far-away times, the inhabitants of this great old, contrary, topsy-turvy world never have been able to take its weather philosophically—"as it comes."

That is why Colonel John E. Finch, veteran and optimistic correspondent of The Greensboro (Ga.) Herald-Journal, has this paragraph in his current weekly news letter—

"The present cold northeast weather is bad on the folks, the gardens and the farms. Don't make a man mad while the wind is blowing from the northeast, for he is already mad enough. Don't make a man mad when he is driving steers in hot weather."

In other words, if there's a twinkle in a springtime fire that lights up home-windows in a chill and driving rain, there's still a worthwhile chance to look on the bright side.

And it isn't idle optimism to take that cheerful view of it!

The unexpected, "unseasonable" weather brings the grouch, but in one way or other, it still has its blessings—if one isn't too "out of sorts" to consider them.

As it has been expressed in homely, hopeful verse—

"We still keep a-livin' along,
An' we won't say the Lord's work is wrong:
We never will sigh
While He's runnin' the sky—
We'll just keep a-livin' along."

And in the meantime, even if spring isn't out in all her glory, it's still the time of beautiful growing things; the home-gardens may be backward, but there's bright weather ahead, and summer will soon be with us, with a world full of fruits and flowers, tables spread with plenty, and the weather grouch forgotten, or leaving by the back door.

WHERE LAW IS MADE.

In the senate the other day Senator McCumber, North Dakóta, who has had charge of the Fordney-McCumber tariff bill since it left the house, took his colleagues severely to task for killing time.

He quoted from an estimate, which, he said, had been "prepared by an expert," to show that at the present rate of progress the tariff bill is making in the senate it will be ready for final vote "on the night of September 29, 1946;" but said the nominal sponsor of the measure, "I think, after listening to the debate today, we will have to add thirty or forty years more to that estimate."

The senator said that actual debate on the tariff bill had consumed only one-fifth of the time the measure has been the subject of deliberation in the senate, for the reason that "we have all gone off on extraneous matters;" and, he declared—

"Unless we get down to the bill itself, I'll tell you what will happen. You will get tired of hearing your own voices and before you have considered one-third of the bill you will be ready to swallow all of it."

The very suggestion of a United States senator getting tired of hearing his own voice is, of course, preposterous.

It requires such a stretch of the imagination as to put it outside the pale of serious contemplation.

And it is almost as hard to imagine a senator becoming so weary of any bill that he would be willing to "swallow" it and shut off "debate" while it is still debatable.

But, anyhow, the reprimand by the distinguished North Dakotan seems to have had the desired effect upon his garrulous fellow solons; for after he got through chiding them for talking too much and wasting time piddling over details of minor consequence the "most august deliberative body in the world" got down to serious business and, according to the Associated Press, "voted to reject an amendment (to the tariff bill) to reduce the proposed duty on boric acid from 1 1-2 cents a pound to 3-4 of 1 cent a pound"—and called it a day's work.

Senator McCumber's "expert" may be right—it may take the senate until 1946 to pas the tariff bill.

But the country can wait, please God!

For that matter, the American people will be better off, no doubt, if the bill is never passed!

BOY FINANCIERS.

The farmers in and around the town of Sylvester who have embarked in a pure-bred stock-raising campaign have not only "made good" in that important home-supply industry, but their example has had a good effect on the farm and school boys of that town and section.

The Waycross (Ga.) Journal-Herald, in an interesting story of a recent co-operative hog sale at Sylvester, says that five hundred and thirty head of fat porkers were sold, and that the farmers received in cash for them something over $7,000.

It was a fairly profitable sale, and this is the comment of the Waycross paper as to its most interesting feature:

"The recent sale originated with the high school boys of McPhaul institute, who commenced feeding some hogs in January. These boys made a profit of from $25 to $63.50. It was clearly shown by the sales prices that the pure bred hogs made the greatest and most economical gains in every case. These school boys are preparing to feed another bunch of hogs. On May 25 Sylvester will hold its first co-operative poultry sale, and indications are that at least five thousand chickens will be offered to the highest bidder on this occasion."

The point is made that the citizens of Sylvester and surrounding productive territory are working for a greater prosperity, and they are going after it in the most practical manner.

The school children are right in line with the progressive spirit of the town. They are doing what they can in every way that helps to bring about local prosperity, and still keeping up their studies.

It is the fact of those studies, and the interest of the citizens of Sylvester in its educational institutions, that is doing so much for the present and future welfare of the youth of the community.

REBUKED FROM WITHIN.

It is doubtful if there ever was a measure introduced in congress that was more generally condemned by the press than is the republican tariff bill that has been passed by the house and is now pending in the senate.

Not only are the democratic and independent newspapers throughout the country aggressively opposed to the Fordney-McCumber abomination, but many of the staunchest of the republican papers have joined in the nation-wide hue and cry against it.

For exampjle, The Boston Transcript, the rock-ribbed old grandfather of the New England republican press, said in a recent editorial that party guidance evidently has been "thrown to the winds" in congressional deliberations upon the pending tariff bill, and that this is undoubtedly due "to the prevalent chaotic conditions of interest and of views;" and it goes on to say:

"There may be some consolation in the fact that it will take a long time to straighten out this chaos of views and that the delay will give an opportunity to get rid of some of the injustices involved in the senate bill. But in the meantime, the manufacturers of the country are carrying all or most of the expenses involved by the war without the market which the war created and are consequently pretty nearly paralyzed. In this situation they are to some extent prepared to regard strikes as a blessing and are content to let the tariff repose at the switch."

In a similar tone The St. Louis Globe Democrat, old-line republican stand-by, said the other day in an editorial discussion of the tariff bill that the measure—

"seem to have applied the principle of protection to everything, without regard to present world conditions and without regard to our altered position in relation to the world's trade. If our tariff does not permit fair competition with other countries how are we to maintain the world trade that is now so essential to our prosperity?"

The Ohio State Journal, republican first, last and all the time, carried an editorial recently in which it admonished the sponsors of the Fordney-McCumber bill to catch step with present day progress.

"Economic conditions in the world," our Buckeye contemporary reminded its fellow republicans in congress—

"have changed so much since the world war that the tariff problem is vastly altered. We are the creditor nation now and the only way in which our debtors can pay is in their products. Our agricultural and manufacturing interests need, as never before, a wide, free foreign market. No one apparently, except the hard-shelled old high protectionists, who is wrong about it, has a clear idea of just what ought to be done. This is one of the cases where it is better to do nothing than to do the wrong thing."

The Syracuse Post Standard, one of the solid old republican papers of "up-state" New York, likewise takes the position that—

"The senate must give ear to the changed conditions of world trade due to our change from a debtor to a creditor nation. It must give ear also to a demand that the rate on foodstuffs shall not be the highest ever levied."

These are only typical of the editorial utterances that are daily being made by the G. O. P. newspapers of the country.

Had opposition to the tariff measure been confined to democratic sources the republicans might measurably have counteracted it by attributing it solely to partisan bias; but their answer to the equally severe criticisms and condemnations arising from within their own party will be awaited with interest.

The republicans have in the past saddled the country with "protection" legislation that was hard enough for the masses to bear, but this is the first instance of their having proposed a measure so patently designed to curry favor with certain interests to the exclusion of the welfare of the country as a whole that even their own foremost newspaper champions have gagged at it!

We have a suspicion that Charon is offered many a fat bribe to ferry over truckloads of tax-free securities.

A man is old when foot comfort seems of greater importance than tickling his vanity.

At times we suspect that a "complex" is just highbrow for damned meanness.

The old-fashioned man who "could take it, or leave it," took it when prohibition came in and passed to his reward.

The administration had an idea that Indiana's "Grand Young Man" had become too old to stage such a big comeback.

The Radio Gossip

(As the Old-Time Brother Sees It)

BY FRANK L. STANTON.

I'm tellin' my ol' woman: "Time's a-gittin' over ground;
The radio is workin' an' repeatin' every sound,
An' you'd best be mighty keerful how you order me around,—
It's tellin' things, promiscuous, to the neighbors!

It tells the songs we sing
In the hallelulia ring!
It's a give-away in winter
An' a gossip in the spring.

"You kin hear the Sunday sermon whilst you're lyin' snug in bed
An' the lonesome rain's a-singing' of a sleep-song on the shed;
When the preacher's tellin' sinners 'bout the brimstone, burnin' red—
O it's tellin' all our troubles to the neighbors!

We'll have to watch and pray
In the dark an' in the day,—
That radio contraption
Is a-givin' things away!"

Then my wise ol' woman answers: "I've done heerd it goin' by,
An' you'd better watch yer own step 'twixt this country an' the sky,
When you storm to shake the shingles—when you raise the roof on high,
For it's tellin' all yer doin's to the neighbors!"

That settles me, I'll say!
Makes the blue sky turn to gray,
An' I've got a quick engagement
'Bout a mile or two away!

CHARACTER OR PEDIGREES

In the current discussion one has heard a great deal more about how the charters were born and who fathered them than he has about the merits of the charters themselves. If the voters could get clearly before their minds the fact that we are to decide which is the best charter, and not deliver an opinion regarding the manner in which the charters came into existence, one would be able to cast a very much more intelligent ballot. A stranger, from reading the discussion, might easily make the mistake of thinking that Mr. Watkins, and not the charter, was the issue before the people.

What difference does it make how Mr. Watkins wrote his charter, or whether he amended it a dozen times, or whether others amended it at different times? Is the charter as presented to us now the best charter? Or, what difference does it make who wrote the composite charter? The fact that Mayor Key appointed the committee and warned them beforehand not to bring in a "city-manager charter," ought not to prejudice us against the charter they did bring in. Nor has the personnel of this committee anything to do with it. The fact that Harry Goodhart once ran for mayor on the platform of a city-manager charter and is now opposed to that kind of charter should not be held against the charter that he now advocates. When the committee for the drafting of a new charter was being appointed, then it was a good thing to discuss its personnel. But now that its work has been done, the charter which they wrote should stand upon its own merits, and we should not be asked to vote for or against it on account of the personnel of those who wrote it.

The Question of Parentage.

The effort has been made to get Mr. Watkins to withdraw the charter known as "The Atlanta Plan." Mr. Watkins has no right to withdraw that charter. His opponents themselves say that many other people have written amendments to the charter, and that 95 per cent of it was taken from the composite charter. So it is folly to talk about the charter being Mr. Watkin's charter. So it is folly to talk about the charter being Mr. Watkins' charter. Whoever was father of the charter, it has been "adopted" by many of the citizens of Atlanta who want a chance to vote for it. The fact that Mr. Watkins was appointed on the committee, the majority of which decided upon the composite charter, most certainly did not take away from him the right to bring in a minority report. The charge has been made that he "bolted." That is an ugly word and, speaking of pedigrees, it has a bad lineage. It was born in the days of the political caucus. One "bolts" a "caucus" and not a committee. Surely these gentlemen were meeting in the capacity of a committee and not as a political caucus. Let us forget personalities and talk charters, like patriotic citizens who are searching for the best for their city.

A Comparison.

The "composite charter" is a distinct advance over the present charter in that it gives us a much shorter ballot and at the same time centers responsibility. The "Atlanta plan" is a distinct advance over the "composite charter." It has the short ballot also, and concentrates authority and responsibility. But it does what the composite charter does not do—it divides the political from the business functions in the government. Those who make the laws are elective officers. Those who administer the business of the city are appointed, and are thus freed from the inevitable political activities necessary in all elections.

Another distinct and important advantage of the Atlanta plan is that the twelve aldermen to be elected, while selected from each ward, are chosen by the ballots of all of the citizens. By this plan, while the aldermen are well distributed, one from each ward, they are elected by all the people and are thus representative of all the people, and responsible to all the people. One of the most vicious phases of the old municipal government system has been the cutting up of the city into wards. It inevitably cultivates sectional and factional consciousness. It develops neighborhood selfishness. Men forget that the interest of one neighborhood is the interest of the entire city and the interest of the entire city includes the interests of each neighborhood. Just here has been the opportunity of the professional politician. He has been enabled to manipulate the city by skillfully playing ward against ward.

As to Population.

The argument has been made that no city of the size of Atlanta has adopted the city-manager form of government. Quite a number of cities which may be said to be, in a general way, in the class of Atlanta have adopted this municipal form. Akron, Ohio, according to the last census, has seven thousand more population than has Atlanta, and Cleveland has only a few less than eight hundred thousand people. The suggestion is made that the city-manager form would do for small cities but not for large. As a matter of fact, in the smaller city the old mayor-aldermanic form can do less injury than in the larger city. It is easier, even with that complicated and confusing form of government, to keep a watchful eye on the city hall in the small city than in the large. Every business man knows that the larger the business, and the larger the number of people interested in the business, the more important it is to concentrate the management of that business in the hands of a few responsible men. That is the reason the stockholders of a large corporation elect the directors, and the directors elect the executive officers. This is the plan proposed for the corporation of Atlanta in the Atlanta plan charter.

SEEING NERO---SUPER-FILM

BY O. O. M'INTYRE.

New York, May 6.—(Special.)—Jaded movie fans are on the brink of the big thrill! Those who have watched with doglike patience for the great American drama have looked in vain but the super-film has arrived. It has been the writer's privilege to be one among ten who attended the private showing of the greatest spectacular moving picture drama ever produced.

It is called "Nero" and the bloody reign of the last of the Caesars is, to use a press agent blub, "shockingly thrilling." The picture was taken in Rome and vicinity, a few scenes are near Naples and in the Alps. An entire city was built on the outskirts of Rome, only to be destroyed by the torch.

An idea of the stupendous cast may be gleaned from the fact that in one scene 65,000 people were employed. Most spectacular films resort to hokum for their effects. This one tells a story with a careful fidelity to historical accuracy that grips and holds. One is transported back to the days of bloody tyrants and Roman orgys.

It is the kind of film that will still the artistic sneer at the celluloid drama. There are moments of terrifying suspense, remindful of the days when Richard Mansfield gripped the imagination and sent the heart racing with fear.

There was a scene when the despicable "Nero" in his lustfully cruel moment actually brought a hiss—followed by a blush of course—from a hardened New York dramatic critic who sat in the projection room at the private showing.

The burning of Rome sweeps the emotions with the same fervor that Nero plunks his lyre during the holocaust. The flames can be seen eating their way while the thousands upon thousands of terror-stricken rush pell-mell to safety.

Then there is the storming of the tyrant's palace by an angry populace. This is the scene where 65,000 people are filmed. It is mob fury at its worst. Buildings are town down, statues toppled into the street and a havoc of destruction the like of which has never been seen before.

The chariot race for the soul of a girl is skilfully worked up to a feverish climax. In the arena are thousands upon thousands echoing the spirit of the Roman holiday. The crowds at the Yale bowl at New Haven look puny in comparison. In this connection it is reported that the American director sought the "extras" by means of advertising and as the crowds came each was given a costume.

They were entertained with games until the time was ripe for the chariot race. They knew nothing of what was going to happen. So it was when the chariot race was actually staged the expressions on the thousands of faces were not acting but real. Some idea of the extent of the assemblages may be gleaned from the fact that between 350 and 400 men were kept constantly busy carrying water to the crowds.

My interest in motion pictures has been passive. I have gone time and again only to go away with a sense of disappointment. So it was that to see what to my mind is the mightiest spectacle ever produced, both from an artistic and dramatic standpoint, was a genuine pleasure. I don't know when "Nero" is coming to your city. It may be a year from now. But when it comes, see it.

"Sally" Leaves The Alley.

"Sally," the gay Cinderella play with a Cinderella star, has moved on to Boston after 70 weeks in the largest theater in town—the New Amsterdam. The total receipts were for in excess of $2,000,000 and in point of attendance it surpassed "Lightnin'," which ran for three years and one day.

In a theater of ordinary size it would have taken "Sally" more than three years to have completed its phenomenal run. The standees numbered more han 75,000. It was completely re-costumed and refurnished scenically three times. The cast with one single exception, remained the same from opening night until the closing.

The run took place during the dullest months in the history of the New York theater—which goes to prove several things. Chiefest of which is the fact that a play with clean lines, good music, beautiful scenery—kept at top speed—will survive the dullest days.

"Sally" was one of those plays that grew somewhat like Topsy. In the original plans, F. Ziegfeld, Jr., intended to star Marilyn Miller, whom he picked from vaudeville a number of years ago and placed in the Follies. She is a member of an old vaudeville family—known as The Four Millers. Merilyn had nimble feet, a set property smile and certain beauty.

She became one of the highest-priced stage stars the world has ever seen. She was wise enough to make her contract for a certain sum and then to share in the gross. She drew salary amounting to something like $300,000 during the run of the play.

While "Sally" was in rehearsal George M. Cohen decided to quit producing. He was then making ready to star Leon Errol, a finished clever comedian. Ziegfeld took over the contract. The lines for Errol were written in and his name went up in electric lights as star along with Marilyn Miller.

It was the happy combination that perhaps did much for the success of the play. Errol is always funny. His humor is sparkling and clean. He does funny falls, but he does not resort to horseplay to get the laugh. He works hard. Like all experienced showmen, Errol was not so optimistic about the future of "Sally." He decided on a straight salary—which in the long run is the best policy. But the play happened to be the notable exception to the rule. But he did not resort to outbursts of temperament.

When "Sally" opened at Atlantic City only one speculator saw in it a "buy." That is a chance for a long run. That speculator became rich. When it opened in New York its success was instantaneous. It was argued that like "Lightnin'" when it moved from New York it would not meet with such success. The theory being that nearly everybody who would pay the price to see "Sally" would, in the course of 70 weeks, visit New York and see it.

Yet in Boston it has duplicated in the first three weeks its New York receipts for the same period. Indeed, one theatrical weekly states that statistics will show that it will run there a year. After Boston it goes to Chicago and then will make a tour of the principal cities. It has paid the government more than 200,000 in tax and has a weekly pay roll running into the thirty thousands.

The closest second to "Sally" in point of attendance was a Cinderella play called "Irene." It ran for two years at the Vanderbilt, a very small theater.

Who Surveyed the Ocean?

The news that the south is planning a memorial to Matthew Fontaine Maury may give rise to the question on many lips, "Who is Maury?"

"We honor the railroad builders who tracked the wilderness for our easy travel; we take the oceans for granted. An observation car passenger, conscious of bridges, tunnels, 'cuts' and 'fills' realizes that the civil engineer preceded the one in the cab. But many a trans-Atlantic traveler considers that Columbus found the way—and that's that," remarks a bulletin from the Washington, D. C., headquarters of the National Geographic society.

A Famous Triumvirate.

In point of fact the observation of winds and currents, the marking of fog and iceberg limits and rain areas, and soundings for temperature constitute a preliminary work without which the safe and swift ocean travel of today would be impossible. The pioneer in this work was Matthew Fontaine Maury, whose name is as familiar to the navigator as is that of Darwin to the naturalist. In the early annals of the American navy he is linked with Charles Wilkes and Matthew Calbraith Perry."

The bulletin then quotes from a communication of Josephus Daniels which relates the fascinating narrative of Maury's career as follows:

"Maury early heard the call to the sea. His elder brother had lost his life in the naval service, and his father opposed Maury's ambition to follow the profession that had robbed him of his first-born, even though the appointment came from Sam Houston, then congressman from Tennessee. What romantic history hangs around the association of Houston and Maury—fighters both and American pioneers and statesmen, too!

"The consuming passion, which made him always follow the path of duty, did not permit even parental objection to dissuade Maury from the high calling in which he was to win primacy.

No Naval Academy Then.

"There was no naval academy when Maury entered the navy. He had been so proficient in mathematics in the country school in Tennessee that he was called upon by his teacher to instruct the younger boys, and on shipboard he continued the methodical study which made him the first scholar and scientist in the navy.

"Using a Spanish work on navigation, he acquired a knowledge of the Spanish language along with a mastery of a subject essential to a seafaring man. In his watches he drilled into his mind the formulas from notes made below decks.

"Laying broad foundations, it was not until his voyage around Cape Horn, when he sought in vain for reliable information as to the winds and currents to be encountered and the best paths for the vessel to follow, that this need determined the particular study to which he would devote himself. When but 28 years old, he published his treatise on navigation. It attracted favorable attention in this country and abroad and became the textbook of the navy.

"Patches of Knowledge."

"Incapacitated for active service by a broken leg, his ambition for command afloat had to be abandoned, though while on crutches he applied for sea service, which was denied him. Writing to a friend at this time, he said: 'I'll content myself with cultivating a few little patches of knowledge. What shall they be? Shall they be light and heat, storms or currents? Ship-building or ship-sailing? Steam or projectiles? Hollow shot or gravitation? Gases or fluids? Winds or tides—or—?'

"His 'patches of knowledge' grew until they almost covered the geography of the world and all naval lore, as the waters cover the sea. In his famous 'Scraps from a Lucky Bag,' he advocated the adoption of steam as a motive power and predicted a new era in naval warfare of big guns. Did he dream of a gun that could shoot an hundred miles?

"He advocated a naval school for midshipmen, 'that they might be instructed in the higher duties of their profession,' and urged the use of regular textbooks. His new ideas fairly startled old sea dogs, who basked in the glories of tradition and regarded new things as revolutionary. But the reforms that he proposed delighted the thoughtful and ambitious, and stimulated study and exploration and science in the navy.

Other Scientific Work.

"In 1843, he read to a distinguished audience in Washington, composed of the president and envoys and congressmen, a paper, 'The Gulf Stream and Its Causes,' and later a paper on the connection of terrestrial magnetism with the circulation of the atmosphere.

"Merely to state the varied achievements of this master naval scientist attests his many-sided service. In addition to his purely maritime discoveries and accomplishments, Senator Vest declared 'the whole signal-service system of this country originated with the navy, and the man in whose brain it first had existence was M. F. Maury.' His system of weather reports has been extended so that on land as well as on sea he was a benefactor, whose ideas have not only made for safety in navigation, but have been of inestimable value to agriculture."

THE TRUCK FARMER

There's lots of folks complaining about hard times these days,
But the guy who's not afraid of work can find a job that pays.
If he will get a strip of land and plow it till he sees
He's got it fixed in first-class shape,
then plant some English peas
And beans and corn and spinach and other stuff galore,
Then when it's fit for market just hand it to the store,
For the city folks will have to eat, no matter how's the times
And though they may be feeling poor, they'll have to spend their dimes
And the fellow who's got food to sell
Can make his living jolly well.

FRANCE TO REJECT PLAN OF LLOYD GEORGE DECLARES SIMONDS

Will Reserve Right To Enforce Demands For German Payment

Only Way France Can Avoid National Calamity is by Getting German Reparations—Mutual Peace Guarantee Would Deprive Her of Ability to Back Up Demands For Payment.

BY FRANK H. SIMONDS

Washington, May 6.—In his original conception of the Genoa conference, Lloyd George had two main purposes, first to bring Russia back into the European circle, commercially and industrially—that is, to open the Russian market; second, to negotiate a treaty of mutual guarantee between all of the powers of Europe, that is, to persuade each nation to pledge itself not to attack its neighbor for a period of at least ten years.

Now it is to the second of these objectives that I desire to call attention at this time, because it has had an inevitable and general appeal to the American audience, somewhat misled by the circumstances of the Washington conference. It is quite true that the Georgian plan follows closely upon the model of our Four-Power Pacific treaty in the matter of exchanging mutual guarantees to respect each other's territory. It is true, too, that this similarity has been generally remarked in the United States and emphasized in Brtain.

But it is essential for Americans to preceive at the outset the profound difference between the circumstances which surround the Pacific and the European situations. The treaty which we negotiated at Washington with Japan, Britain and France was a treaty which pledged all four to accept a territorial situation not the result of war, but as between the four signatory powers, eminently satisfactory. Moreover, if we had twice fought Great Britain, the two wars had been banished by more than a century of peace and by recent associations in a great war.

MARKED CHANGE IN SITUATION.

Never in our history have we been attacked by France, by Britain or by Japan under circumstances which could recall 1914 and the German performance. No one of the four nations had any reason to regard its security as menaced; no one of the four had any reason to feel that one or all of the other three held territory rightfully belonging to it. All four peoples were satisfied, profoundly satisfied to accept things as they were.

Finally, and the situation has no more important angle, no one of the four powers was legally and morally bound to any other to pay a debt, established by treaty and essential to the fiscal solvency of that country. Thus in pledging ourselves to respect territorial integrity, we did not lay aside the power to collect any debt, by force if necessary, the debt having been acknowledged by treaty.

Now in examining the problem of Lloyd George's European proposal, it is essential to perceive that, while there are states which can and will accept such an agreement without hesitation or mental reservation, there are others which either cannot or have not yet shown any willingness to do so. And accepting human nature for what it is, one must acknowledge that there is in many cases at least colorable justification for such refusal.

It is easy to imagine France and Italy, France and Belgium, France and Spain, France and Great Britain agreeing to respect each other's integrity. As between France and Britain, Spain and Belgium, there is not the smallest contemporary evidence of any desire to seize territory or invade sovereignty. As between France and Italy there is, on the Italian part, little bitterness surviving over Tunis and there are a few extremists who dream of acquiring Nice, Corsica and Mentone, just as similar perfervid patriots dream of taking the Canton of Ticino from Switzerland. Yet one may say safely that, for the mass of Italians, the frontiers that exist are accepted.

When, however, one comes to the question of the frontiers between France and Germany one plunges at once into the bog. So also does the student who considers the new boundary between Belgium and Germany, which gave to Belgium certain areas once German. Will Germany accept the restoration of Alsace-Lorraine to France as final? At least German propaganda continues to claim and German school books to emphasize German title to the Reichsland of 1914.

And this German state of mind is balanced by a French. All France believes Germany is planning a war of revenge. Therefore, most Frenchmen believes that, as long as German spirit is what it is, French troops must stay on the Rhine, where they can stay of right for some years yet, under the treaty of Versailles. But a treaty guaranteeing integrity as between two nations is meaningless, if a portion of the integrity is already violated, as in the case of the Rhineland, albeit with perfect legal warrant as established by the treaty of Versailles.

Even more immediately pertinent is the question of sanctions. Germany owes France many billions for her war destruction, billions which have in no considerable part been paid yet. So far Germany has demonstrated, quite naturally a determination to avoid payment as far as possible. But, a year ago, when she had refused to accept the decision of the allies in the matter of reparation totals, she yielded to the threat of French occupation of the Ruhr and promised to pay.

Now the French believe, with obvious reason, that if you once abolish their right, which exists in law, to occupy German territory, if Germany fails to pay—or what is now to the point, refuses to pay, then the reparations account is as good as lost, the war is lost and France is bankrupt. But if France has the power to invade and the right and does not resign either, then a treaty of mutual guarantee is quite meaningless, for one must always confront the possibility, set forth in Poincare's Dar-le-Duc speech, that France will march into the Ruhr.

PREMIER'S PLAN BREAKS DOWN.

The effort to bring peace, to stabilize European conditions by the adoption of Lloyd George's little plan of following the Washington precedent breaks down, then at once, before the two obstacles which have so far bedeviled the whole European situation for three years, namely reparations and security for France. And obviously we are then thrown back upon the same vicious situation which has persisted from armistice to Genoa.

How can one reconcile the Georgian plan with the European facts of today? George believes and finds ready credence at home and in America that in some fashion the mere signing of a document pledging mutual respect for territories would establish peace. But Belgium had a treaty guaranteeing her neutrality in 1914 and that treaty became the immortal "scrap of paper" when the world war broke.

Moreover, France was attacked in 1914, deliberately attacked by a Germany, which planned to destroy her. How then can France be expected to attach real value to a treaty which can have no more sanctity than the famous Belgic guarantee? As for compelling Germany to pay reparations—any reparations, and everybody concedes there is some sum which Germany is able to pay—how can France have any hold upon Germany if she resigns the power to invade Germany, if Germany refuses satisfaction under the law?

It is true that a French occupation of the Ruhr would set Europe by the ears, postpone economic reconstruction, probably bring new war and fresh chaos. It is true that such chaos would postpone British prosperity and even work hardship in the United States. It is clear that such occupation, therefore, would do material and perhaps fatal injury to Britain, to Italy, to many neutral European states. Therefore it is manifest why most European states set their face against such French action.

On the other hand, it is equally plain that if Germany does not pay France is ruined, fissically ruined at once, politically ruined presently, for the burden laid upon her smaller numbers would be intolerable. Therefore the smallest regard for the future of France must lead every Frenchman to refuse to sacrifice the power which he holds to enforce his claims upon the altar of world prosperity and progress. And the world, on its part, has so far failed to undertake any engagement to insure France against the consequences of a policy of resignation, whether political or financial.

The German does not mean to pay, the Briton no longer cares whether Germar pays France or not, so long as the German market can be opened to his production and his unemployed find work. The Frenchman feels that his claims are such that he has the right to compel the Germans to pay, even if the process brings hardship to Briton, Italian and American. France owes Britain and America large sums. Britain and America both insist France shall pay. But payment is possible only if Germany pays France. Yet America and Britain both protest against French action to compel German payment,

FRANCE GIVEN NO GUARANTEE.

Lloyd George asks France to believe that if she agrees with Germany to respect territorial integrity and refrain from action, Germany will both pay and cease to harbor ideas of vengeance. But George offers France no guarantee of protection from German attack—can offer no guarantee, for the British army has been reduced to narrow limits and is required to face grave imperial issues in India, in Mesopotamia and in Ireland. And obviously Britain does not promise to make up the sums due France from Germany in the matter of reparations, if Germany refuses to pay and France does not employ force.

The Englishman says—and perhaps a majority of Americans agree, that the use of force by France threatens European civilization, that it is essential to get back to peace conditions. He tells the Frenchman that reparations are fixed at an impossible sum—although he helped fix them and ratified the treaty which did fix them. He tells the Frenchman that military activity now will insure German attack in the future. But he has no alternative, save that France sahll make all the sacrifices and run all the risks. All he says is that his way is right, morally right, and the French way morally wrong and politically inexpedient.

There is the deadlock, there it has been since the conference of Paris, or more exactly since the United States senate rejected the Paris settlement and the Anglo-American guarantee to France lapsed. Ever with increasing energy the Briton has insisted France must take his view. And we have more and more absorbed this British point of view, partly because for us, too, such French submission would be convenient and profitable. Like the British we lay great emphasis on the moral superiority of our solution, but like the British, we close our eyes firmly to any possible risk to France.

Now, unless there is a complete revolution in French opinion and in French public life, a revolution of which there were no signs in Paris in April, France will not make this sacrifice. She will not resign the power or the right to use her army to compel Germany to observe her military pledges and pay her reparations debts. She will not do this even if the alternative leaves her isolated in the world. Indeed the French already feel isolated, but the sense of isolation does not in the least promote surrender. Rather it inspires a certain dogged determination to go it alone, of which the Bar-le-Duc speech was but an illustration.

HOW POLAND VIEWS SITUATION.

But the Franco-German problem is not the only one raised by Lloyd George's proposed treaty of mutual guarantee. Looking eastward there is the case of Poland. By various treaties, plebiscites, etc., Poland has acquired much territory, not by any means all that was Polish when Germany, Austria and Russia began the partitions of the eighteenth century. But these acquisitions are challenged by Russia, by Lithuania, by Germany. On what territorial basis can Poland's integrity be guaranteed?

On the condition "as is," insist the Poles. But the Russians refuse to recognise the condition created by the treaty of Riga, then even claim, through the Ukranians, that Eastern Galicia which was never Russian at all, but passed from Austria to Poland when the Hapsburg monarchy elapsed and had been Polish before it was Austrian. But now the British intervene and suggest that Poland should moderate her ideas of her own integrity, be satisfied with less than she has. All of this would much assist in placating Russia and Germany, but to the Pole it would be a new partition.

You will find all this Polish attitude bitterly condemned in many British journals and in some American which echo Manchester ideas. The reason is obvious; if the Poles, like the French, don't submit, then settlement may be delayed, there may be fresh wars in the east of Europe. British policy has always been hostile to Poland, because any Poland is an intolerable interference both with German and Russian historical policies and sooner or later there will be new struggles, since neither the Russian nor the German has resigned his old holdings in Poland.

Yet it is perfectly idle to suppose that the Poles will join in any European arrangement which excludes part of the territory they hold from the protection of the document. The same is true of Rumania. The Rumanians have occupied Bessarabia, which has by its own vote united itself with the Rumanian crown. A majority of the people are Latin. But Russia has never recognized the union. Certainly Rumania will never subscribe to a treaty of mutual guarantee, which omits Bessarabia, but not impossibly Russia might refuse to agree to one which included it. Hence some British and some Americans are terribly vexed with Rumania.

Then there is Hungary. She has been reduced from a great state to a hopeless fragment. Never while the Danube flows to the sea will the Hungarians resign their claims to the old territory of the Crown of St. Stephen. Any document, however solemn, will have no meaning for them if the opportunity comes to restore the old frontiers. But to prevent this Rumania, Czecho-Slovakia and Jugo-Slavia have formed the little entente. By contract, Italy, fearful of the Slavs, has carried on an intrigue with Hungary, and Germany and Russia are reported to be seeking to include Hungary in the new Russo-German alliance.

I shall not seek here to multiply the examples of the utter unwillingness of many of the nations in Europe to accept the present territorial distribution as final or more than the result of military defeat. But there is no way of adjusting this difference of opinion, because if you restored the situation of 1914, remade the map of Europe to suit those now dissatisfied, you would only transfer the dissatisfaction to the other camp and reproduce the conditions out of which the world war developed. There is no way under Heaven by which you can establish a frontier which will be satisfactory or even tolerable to both the Rumanian and the Magyar, the German and the Poles or the Czecho-Slovak, the Italian and the Jugo-Slav.

Every Frenchman believes that, when the hour is favorable, Germany will attack him. Every Pole knows that he must expect attack both from the German and the Russian. The Czech is menaced by German and Hungarian, the Rumanian by Russian, Hungarian and Bulgarian, the Jugo-Slav by Hungarian, Bulgarian and Italian. In the face of the national sentiment of all the peoples of the East of Europe from the Baltic to the Black Sea any guarantee of territorial integrity would be a joke, or worse, a palpable lie.

This, moreover, is what every European, every Continental European perceives quite clearly. Such a guarantee would, if accepted by France, tie French hands for the present, but it would not lessen German determination for revenge. Poland might resign Eastern Galicia, Vilna, even Silesia, but it would not reconcile Russia to the loss of territories taken under the treaty of Riga or persuade Germany to tolerate long the surrender of Posen and the Danzig corridor.

It is customary to say that the treaty of Versailles sowed the seeds of future wars. Of course it did, but what no one ever suggests is that there was no settlement conceivable which would not have done the same thing. Concede that the Poles are entitled to freedom and there are no frontiers which you can give them, no territories which you can assign them which will not reduce the areas of Prussia and Russia as they existed in 1914. The same is true of Rumania and Hungary, it is true all over Europe. Versailles may have been bad or good, territorially speaking, but no one has suggested a substitute settlement for which acceptance on all sides could even be imagined.

TWO PROPOSALS AT VERSAILLES.

Out of this situation, which was quite as apparent at Paris as it is at Genoa developed two proposals, the league of nations with and without the addition of force. The French wanted to make the league an association of victorious powers having the necessary military power to guarantee the frontiers laid down in the new settlement. The British and the American representatives saw in this only a prepetuation of the old system of alliances.

Yet to persuade the French to agree to some of the American and British conceptions it was necessary to give them that Anglo-American guarantee, which was, after all, only another form of alliance and as such was rejected by American public opinion and never laid before the United States senate. The failure of the treaty of guarantee, however, threw the situation right back where it was at the outset.

Most British and American opinion starts with the major assumption that if you reduced reparations to a reasonable figure Germany would pay and that if you abolished armies, or reduced French military strength to the limits fixed for Germany in the treaty of Versailles, the danger of war would be removed. But this is after all precisely the assumption Frenchmen cannot accept. They believe with as much reason and just as great sincerity that without force Germany would not pay at all and that if France were weak she would be attacked.

British self-interest demands that the German markets be restored, French that Germany pay and abandon designs for revenge. The British hold French policy responsible for world economic chaos, highly costly to Britain. But the French believe that the British would sacrifice French security and solvency to restore German markets. Both peoples talk very earnestly about the higher morality of their personal view, but at bottom interest and morality run in parallel lines for each nation.

The Eglnishman is far more fortunate than the Frenchman, because the larger part of the world is interested in restoring the German market. The Frenchman is less lucky, because no one cares deeply whether France gets paid or not, save as a matter of abstract justice or of sentiment. The fact that the German wrought his ruin on French soil makes the French case peculiar. The consequence is that France is put in the position of holding up the procession and those peoples who are adversely affected naturally criticise the French.

Nevertheless the Frenchman means to insist upon his claim, which all the world has acknowledged, both in the Versailles treaty and in the various reparations agreements since. He also means to insist upon being protected either by guarantee or by his own strength against a new German attack. America and Britain are not willing to supply the guarantee, but they are becoming more and more insistent that France should cease to block reconstruction.

Now to remove French opposition or obstruction, Mr. Lloyd George's treaty of insurance has no value. Actually, it gives France no lasting security and it deprives France of the power to exert military pressure on Germany, if she does not pay. It does not vest with any competent body the power to exercise pressure, if Germany wrongfully resists, it does not provide any way to help French rights to balance the power it takes away from France in eliminating the possibility of French occupation of more German soil.

An English or an Anglo-American guarantee of French security against another German attack would have no value in case Germany refused to pay, unless provision was made for joint military and naval action against Germany in such an event. But such an agreement would destroy the purpose of the whole Genoa performance, because it would leave open the possibility of further military operations and thus miss stabilizing Europe.

FRANCE ALONE WAS SUFFERER.

If German devastation had been equally wrought upon French, British and American soil, then there would be no such divergence of policy as exists today, then all three nations would be equally concerned in reparations. But France alone suffered and France alone insists upon reparations. This insistence is mightily annoying to the British who want German markets, but this does not make it immoral or even militaristic.

If there is to be real stabilization in Europe some one must invent a means of insuring German payment and German renunciation of vengeful purposes as a companion piece to any programme depriving France of the existing right to use force to compel Germany to pay and to occupy German territory to guard against a repetition of 1870 and 1914. What complicates the whole situation now is that French rights—moral and legal alike, constitute the stumbling block to all European reconstruction and therefore most European nations insist that France shall sacrifice her rights on the altar of the common good.

And the same thing is true, speaking territorially, of Poland, of Rumania, of various other new or newly expanded countries. The title of various countries is passed upon, not as a matter of law or nationality, but as it affects the comfort, prosperity, convenience of other countries not directly interested. Polish possession of upper Silesian mines becomes a crime for the British, despite the decision of plebiscite and League of Nations commissions, because it manifestly retards German rehabilitation. French occupation of the left bank of the Rhine, despite treaty warrant, offends British morality, because it postrones the restoration of German markets and promotes unrest on the continent.

It is true, however, that unless you mean to saddle France, the victim of German aggression, with the costs of reconstruction, following German devastation, there must be some means to guarantee German payment. So far the French army constitutes the only possible police power. But since to use it is to affect the pocket nerve of half the countries in the world, one hears in all of these countries solemn discussion of French militarism. And in the United States and Great Britain one talks much of the possibility that France will find herself "morally isolated."

In France, on the contrary, one hears much of the fact that France has been "immorally isolated." She has been deserted by her allies, who today are more concerned with German markets than with French ruins. This is a French view. But does anyone imagine that France will resign her claims as a consequence of an isolation which she regards as the proof of the fundamental selfishness of those with whom she was recently associated? There could not be a bigger fallacy than this.

It may be necessary to reduce the sum of reparations although this cannot be done without reducing our war loans claims against France proportionately. But reduction having been made, it will remain necessary to provide a way of insuring that Germany will pay the bill thus amended. It will also be necessary to guarantee that if she attacks again, France will have instant help. Otherwise France will not give up the weapons that lie in her hands, no matter how disagreeable the result to the rest of the world.

And the trouble with the Georgian proposal is that it does not make any such provisions, it gives no guarantees, it deprives the victim of the power to obtain redress but it does nothing to insure the payment by the aggressor. Solution of the European problems is not to be found in the mere signing of documents. One might as well hope to cure disease by the muttering of incantations. Nine-tenths of the world might be better off if the British ideas were to prevail, but the other tenth would be sacrificed or run the risk of being sacrificed without hope of redress. That is why that tenth will not consent and why, at the moment, the Georgian pact would be as futile as the Wilsonian league, temporarily forgotten in all this Genoa excitement, but yesterday acclaimed as the single sure remedy for the evils of that hour all of which have survived.

"DANCE-O-MANIA" IS FEATURED AT LOEW'S

Spectacular Dance Revue Heads Bill of Five Stellar Acts.

A splendid variety of high-class entertainment is promised in the two high-class vaudeville programs announced as the attractions at Loew's Grand theater for the coming week. Ten carefully selected acts will be offered, equally divided between the first and last half of the week. Every possible style of entertainment is provided in these two bills—late dances, popular songs direct from Broadway, daring athletic feats and novel and unique acts of various kinds.

As topliners of the program for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, the management has provided "Dance-O-Mania," a pretentious and novel dance surprise, featuring Myron Pearl and a quartet of lively steppers. There are five in the company, three men and two girls, all accomplished as dancers and with splendid singing voices. In a special scenic setting and beautiful costumes, they will offer a stunning revue of character, novelty and spectacular dances.

The athletic end of the bill offers Vee and Tully in a novel equilibristic revue, featuring their gymnastic canine "Jackie." They offer a novel routine of gymnastic specialties, hand-to-hand balancing and risley feats, done mostly by the dog. Lillian Tully, who is the undrestander, weighs but 115 pounds, while George Vee, her partner, weighs 165. She is 5 feet tall and remarkably strong. All their tricks are new and difficult, daring leaps and catches, never before attempted by a woman. The ten minutes they absorb is full of pep and action.

"After the Honeymoon," presented by Hal Norton and Virginia Milton, is a comedy playlet of the tribulations of married life—just the sort of a domestic story that will interest the married people and the unmarried ones as well. Both principals in the farce are artists of ability and, from advance reports are making a decided hit with their humorous vehicle.

Other acts are Harry Sikes in "African Opera," special and popular song selections in blackface, and Beck and Stone, "Joyful Songologists," in melody and "pep."

Featured on the screen for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, is William Farnum in "A Stage Romance," the story of a circus boy who defied a prince, and with superb acting and a surprising plot that holds one's interest throughout the entire five reels.

MELODY SEXTET IS TOPLINER AT LYRIC

Six Talented Musicians and Singers in Harmonious Song Offering.

For the first three days of the coming week at Keith's Lyric theater a program of six splendid high-class and highly diverting and entertaining acts is announced to appear on the program. The headline attraction will be offered in Henry's Melody Sextet, six clever and highly accomplished musicians and singers in "A Harmonious Offering of Songs and Music." These young ladies were selected with an idea of bringing to vaudeville an exceptional feminine sextet and the idea has been more than successfully accomplished. Each of the girls is an artist in her own right and might easily win public approval by herself. These six talented girls are all fascinating, charming and attractive.

An extra added attraction is offered in George Dameral and Myrtle Vail with Miss Miriam Allyn in a musical satire on the movies written especially for them by Jack Lait, one of the premier writers of present day skit successes. Mr. Dameral and his company are making a return engagement to the Lyric by popular request and demand of the great many that were turned away who were unable to get seats to see them on their recent engagement. Mr. Dameral and Miss Vail are former stars of Mr. Dameral's former vaudeville musical successes, "Temptation" and "The Little Devil," and Mr. Dameral is the famouse creator of the prince role in "The Merry Widow." Their present vaudeville offering is a humorous musical and comedy travesty on doings and happenings in a modern movie studio.

Jack Cahill as a "wop" and Don Romaine as a "coon" offer a novel and unique comedy skit called "A Comedy Mix-up," can be figured on to clean up on any bill; both have excellent dialects and their cross-fire talk is exceedingly clever. Cahill and Romaine both have excellent voices and their comedy numbers are sure to furnish most enjoyable and laughing entertainment.

Edith Jane and Harold Miller offer dance steps of the moment with a series of new and up-to-date dance steps and a varied assortment of interesting specialties.

Walsh and Bentley, the bell boy and the athlete, present some astoundingly amazing stunts in tumbling and gymnastic feats of skill and strength.

The McDonald Trio in a cycle of beauty and daring composed of two girls and a young man. The girls are pleasing and easy to look upon and daintily costumed and the three know no limits when it comes to sensational athletic feats.

The last half of the week bill for Thursday, Friday and Saturday is headed by the JaDa Trio, Chester, O'Brien and Allen in comedy and songs of the top-notch variety.

NEW GRIFFITH FILM COMING HERE SOON

"Orphans of the Storm" at Criterion Week of May 15.

What is rated one of the most important motion picture deals of the season is the contract just consummated by which the Criterion theater obtains the first showing of the big D. W. Griffith film, "Orphans of the Storm."

It is said there was considerable competition for this picture here, in spite of its magnitude which restricts it to the accommodatin of only the more important houses.

"Orphans of the Storm" is the latest triumph of the genius who produced the series of master films beginning with "The Birth of a Nation" and running through such successors as "Intolerance," "Broken Blossoms" and "Way Down East."

Its metropolitan debut in the house reserved for Griffith premieres was the holiday event of the New York theater world. Since then a Griffith presentation has been arranged for progressively in other important centers of the country, and the picture is booked as a strictly "big-time" proposition. The reception given it in Boston, Chicago, Cleveland, Detroit, Pittsburg and other large cities has been an echo of the praise won by it in New York.

"Orphans of the Storm" is D. W. Griffith's biggest. Based on the stirring melodrama, "The Two Orphans," with a record of a half century's success, the Griffith film utilizes every bit of dramatic action in it and displays it against a Titanic background of action and atmosphere of the period—the French revolution. They have hailed "Orphans of the Storm" as a moving story, swift in action, wonderful in historic interest, and filled with a masterly sense of suspense and climax. From my inspection of the picture I more than share the enthusiasm of the critics.

Not only has a great spectacular undertaking been accomplished in the new Griffith film, but it is played by a notable cast. For the first time since the "Hearts of the World," the two Gish sisters are in one film, as the two orphans.

Rex Ingram, whose $1,000,000 production of "The Prisoner of Zenda" will be seen soon on Broadway, belongs to an artistically creative family. His half-sister is Nina Wilcox Putnam, whose contributions to The Saturday Evening Post have made her well known. Mr. Ingram's production of "The Prisoner of Zenda" was made for Metro. The photoplay is founded on Edward Rose's dramatization of Anthony Hope's novel. Previously Ingram successes on the screen were "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," "The Conquering Power" and "Turn to the Right."

FORSYTH PLAYERS TO OFFER CLEVER FARCE

"She Walked in Her Sleep" Selected for Coming Week.

Mark Swain's clever and scintillating farce, "She Walked in Her Sleep," which will be presented by the Forsyth players at the Forsyth theater, this week, has been declared by critics and audiences to be one of the funniest productions of the season. And, though the title might lead one to suspect that it was another of those "bedroomy" farces, it really isn't that sort at all. It depends for its fun upon clean humor—both lines and situations—and there isn't a suggestive scene in the whole show.

When a young woman—a pretty maiden replete with charms—is afflicted with somnambulism to the extent that she walks about in her little silk nightie and a picture hat, there are bound to be complications.

Particularly, when she selects for her nocturnal somnambles the room and mezzanine floor and roof of a big hotel.

That is what "Daphne" the little sleep walker does in this week's play. She walks and walks through three acts of fun-producing, trouble-making situations that almost wreck a flock of happy homes.

There is the wise wife who doesn't fall for that famous hubby's alibi about the "sleep-walker." There is a mother-in-law. And a newly-wedded couple. Also an explosive old dynamic manufacturer who threatens to "blow up" at any moment. It is a show full of thrills and spasms of fun.

Clad in very sketchy clothes, a nippy little nightie from which her pink toes peep forth, the sleep-walking young miss involves several innocent males in all sorts of trouble.

If you want to laugh, laugh, laugh, from rise of curtain to close of the show, you want to see what really happens this week in "She Walked in Her Sleep."

His initial photoplay, "The Masquerader," having received the enthusiastic indorsement of Associated First National executives, Richard Walton Tully has been encouraged to begin his second motion picture at the earliest possible moment.

With Mrs. Tully and their little daughter, the producer left New York this week for Los Angeles to launch immediately into the picturization of "Omar the Tentmaker," with Guy Bates Post as the star.

James Young will again act as director for Mr. Tully, with Wilfred Buckland as art director and George Benoit as photographer.

JACKIE COOGAN FILM COMES TO CRITERION

Young Screen Star, in "My Boy," Has Best Role.

It was a great day for Jackie Blair when he was invited to the children's party in the settlement house. For one thing, he had not had any too much to eat for several days, and the feast spread out on the table held his eyes with fascintion; in fact the food intrigued him so much that he was unable to put his heart into the infantile games which the sponsors insisted on.

But when he got to the "eats" Jackie filled up all right. In addition to loading his stomach to its full capacity he stuffed his blouse with all manners of edibles. A short time later a purse was missed. A search of all the lads attending the party was begun. Not knowing the purpose of the search and suspecting that the food he had appropriated was the objective, Jackie beat a hasty retreat through the window.

What happened to Jackie after that episode furnishes one of the intensely funny situations in "My Boy," an Associated First National attraction starring Jackie Coogan, which is coming to the Criterion theater on Monday for an engagement of six days. And in it Jackie proves his inalienable right to the appellation of "star."

'BEYOND THE ROCKS' HOWARD ATTRACTION

Gloria Swanson and Rudolph Valentino to Play Leading Parts.

Playing at the Howard theater this week in the photoplay, "Beyond the Rocks," featuring the Paramount stars, Gloria Swanson and Rudolph Valentino. Gloria Swanson is seen in more than a score of the most elaborate dress creations imaginable and the picture is a screen adaptation of Elinor Glynn's latest famous novel of the same name. It is a lavish, scintillating romance encompassing England, France and Italy.

The story is of an overflowing young heart bound by society's conventions, struggling and risking all for happiness. Gay nights of revelry in the Paris world of fashion, tingling adventure on snow-clad crags of the Alps, intrigue and coquetry in gilded resorts of London high society. A flaming romance that only the author of "Three Weeks" could write, and glorious Gloria, with Rudolph Valentino playing thel over, could make it live in all its ardent splendor. It is a love drama with all the thrill and luxury of a lifetime.

Enrico Leide has arranged a most elaborate program for this week. The overture, "The Pink Lady," including excerpts selected from this successful Broadway musical comedy hit, "By the Saskatchewan," and "Beautiful Lady."

As the prologue extraordinary, for the first time in the south, Enrico Leide presents his original production, "The Enchanted River and Forest Fire," featuring "The Blue Danube Waltz" and "Aida's Triumphal March" with a mammoth choral ensemble of fifty voices and principals under the supervision of Signor Emilio Volpi, as follows: Madeline Hower, Vivian Baker, W. J. Craig, Jennie Gavin Dean, Lois Entreken, E. Hower, Minnie Langley, Charles Maddux, Elsa Stenger, K. Stenger, Olive Walker, Nellie Young, Nora Iplov, Frances Jenkins, Marie Carlton, Mrs. Thelma Collins, Miss Thelma Collins, John E. Carlson, Nellie Laing, H. Busse, F. M. Kinnett, Nellie Laina, Edith Moore, E. Morris, Lee Davis, George McCarty, W. Van Goidshoven, J. W Cooper, F. E. Dawson, Thomas Dendy, R. Rollain, W. K. Stillman, W. R. Lehman, F. A. Turner, J. B. Clotworthy, A. Bainbridge, C. H. Dudley, Ralph Bennett, W. N. Massengale, O. B. Maurer, J. M. Shropshire.

Rex Ingram, director of "The Prisoner of Zenda," his latest big production for Metro, employs trick photography in his pictures but rarely, and then only when there is no other way around an obstance of illusion. He defies anyone, however, to detect the spots in a picture when John F. Seitz, his cameraman, makes things not what they seem.

"Since my association with Mr. Seitz on the set," the young director said, "I've discovered that the hand that cranks the camera fools the world."

Prominent Film Stars in New Photoplay Productions

ALAMO 2 PRODUCTION STARS WALLACE REID

Peter Ibbetson's "Forever," with Wallace Reid, Elsie Ferguson, Elliott Dexter and an all-star cast, will be shown at the Alamo No. 2 Monday and Tuesday.

"Forever" is one of the greatest love stories of all times. A delicate touch of symbolism appears in this picture frequently used in literature but seldom in a motion picture. The scenic atmosphere of the picture was made to correspond with the lives of the characters and their moods.

The Pasquier garden is a vital part of the production, as it was of the Du Maurier story. In the scenes where the children Gogo and Mimsi are first introduced, the Pasquier garden appears blooming with tender, early plants and fruit blossoms. It is the beginning, before grief and unpleasantness have entered their young lives. The old house is half hidden by clusters of wistaria, geraniums are seen in the window boxes and beds about the door.

Purple and white irises and lilac bushes heavy with blossoms, are everywhere.

The seasons progress with the story.

Gogo and Mimsi grow into adolescence; the lilac and wistaria blossoms disappear and full-bloom roses are seen in the yard.

Frank Lloyd, who directed Norma Talmadge's "The Duchess of Langeais," recently completed for First National release, will direct Jackie Coogan's next picture, "Oliver Twist." Lon Chaney will play "Fagin" and Wallace Beery is cast for Bill Sykes" in the Coogan production.

William Moran has been added to the cast of "The Bonded Woman," Betty Compson's latest Paramount picture, directed by Philip Rosen. Mr. Moran will play a first mate to "Cap'n" John Powers. Recently he appeared as Mephistopheles in a picture starring Agnes Ayres.

'MISS LULU BETT' ON RIALTO SCREEN

Is Typically American Picture, Dealing With Small Town Life.

"Miss Lula Bett," William de Mille's Paramount production coming to the Rialto theater all this week, is the screen version of the play which won the Pulitzer prize of $10,000 as the best American play produced during the 1920-21 theatrical season. The play ran on Broadway and was a decided hit. Zone Gale, an American novelist, is the author.

The story is typically American and deals with a side of small town home life not yet uncovered. The principal character is the seemingly unattractive spinster sister-in-law of a small town justice of the peace and dentist. She has to depend upon him for support and shelter, and thus she automatically becomes the unpaid family servant. Later, romance enters into her life, only to increase her troubles. After several bitter experiences, however, everything clears up for Lulu and happiness and love are her reward.

Milton Sills is leading man and Lois Wilson plays the role of the girl. Theodore Roberts, Helen Ferguson, Mabel Van Buren and others of prominence are in the cast.

"Wanted an Alibi," a comedy full of laughs and international News add to a most attractive program.

'PEACOCK ALLEY' IS OFFERING AT STRAND

Mae Murray Is Star, Portraying Role of Parisian Dancer.

It is not often that motion picture fans are given the opportunity to see the latest and most stylish costumes presented by one of the most attractive artists of the screen in a story vibrant with romance and adventure, but that is what Mae Murray's latest picture, "Peacock Alley," is. It will be shown, beginning Monday, at the Strand theater.

MAE MURRAY.

In this Metro release for Tiffany Productions, Inc., presented by Robert Z. Leonard, Miss Murray portrays the part of a Parisian dancer, who, as the darling of the famous city of pleasure, is feted and adored for her daring and artistic creations. She falls in love with a youthful American, a small town boy, and goes back to his home only to find that the people of the little village are scandalized at his French wife. The rude awakening among the bright lights of Broadway gives this story a turn which makes it one of the most dramatic offerings of the screen.

"Peacock Alley" is typically a Mae Murray picture. Its gorgeous settings and the costly costumes of the star are outstanding features in an offering which at its special showing in New York won the unstinted praise of the critics as being the most beautiful and gorgeous production of the screen. The cast supporting Miss Murray is a most notable one and includes Monte Blue in the leading male role, Edmund Lowe, W. J. Ferguson, Anders Randolf, William Tooker, Howard Lang, William Frederick, M. Durant and Jeffrys Lewis. "Peacock Alley" is by Edmund Goulding, based on a story by Ouida Bergere. It was directed by Robert Z. Leonard and photographed by Oliver T. Marsh.

In connection with the showing of this feature a two-reel comedy featuring the incomparable Bille West will also be on the program.

The showings of "The Miracle Man" during Paramount's revival week finds three of the players who rose to fame in that offering busy at work in the Lasky studio. Betty Compson is doing "The Bonded Woman," while Thomas Meighan has just completed "Our Leading Citizen," by George Ade. Frankie Lee, the pathetic cripple boy of the great master-picture, is playing in "Borderland," an Agnes Ayres Paramount picture.

'SMILIN' THROUGH' HELD OVER AT METROPOLITAN

Norma Talmadge in Best Role of Her Screen Career.

For the first time in its history the Metropolitan theater is holding a picture over for a second week—and that picture is "Smilin' Through" with Norma Talmadge in the most lovely role she has ever played. The presentation of "Smilin' Through" last week was flawless—from the musical setting to the smallest detail the atmosphere was that of Allen Langdon Martin's beautiful story. The front of the theater suggested the beautiful old gardon in which most of the scenes are laid, the lobby was like a rare old gallery with its wonderful portraits of Norma in her 1800 model wedding gown, and the young girls who usher for the theater wore the quaint hoop-skirts and tight bodice of that period.

But it was because "Smilin' Through" touched a responsive chord in the hearts of Atlanta people that it registered a success. And it was because many were unable to see the picture during the first week of its engagement that the management determined to hold it over.

Writing of "Smilin' Through" Dudley Glass said: "It would be impossible to say which is the more charming, the play or the picture, for each offered something the other could not provide. 'Smilin' Through' is one of the sweetest and loveliest of photo-dramas. It is the play as a whole, the sentiment which pervades it, the lesson of love it teaches, the excellent drawing of its characters and the perfection of filmcraft that marks every moment of it."

Not only did the press and public unite in paying tribute to the beautiful screen version of this famous play, but the Better Films committee of Atlanta, constantly alert for the best in motion pictures, set the stamp of their approval on "Smilin' Through" in a cordial telegram of indorsement addressed to the producer.

William Farnum, in "A Stage Romance," Picture at Grand

"A Stage Romance," is the attraction at the Loew's Grand theater and has created much favorable comment because of its clever plot and the fact that it depicts an important period in the life of Edmund Kean, the great actor, whose genius bordered on madness.

The presence of the virile, accomplished Farnum as the star is of itself a magnet usually sufficient to pack any house; but this photoplay gives Farnum a particularly griping story with which to display his talents. Alexandre Dumas, pere, from whose play the picture was made, is often called the world's greatest plot builder. Furthermore, the story concerns a crucial period in the life of Edmund Kean, the illustrous actor.

Social intrigue among highest families in England enmeshes Kean, and in a startling dramatic incident he commits a rash act against no less a personage than his friend the Prince of Wales. The outcome, as told in "A Stage Romance," makes this picture one of the most surprising ever seen. Herbert Brenon directed.

At Last!

Those two incomparable lovers are together—not "brought together by fate," but by the demand of the American public.

"Smilin' Through is one of those utterly beautiful, wholesome and exquisite things which are few and far between.—Dudley Glass, Atlanta Georgian.

Seldom, if ever before, has a motion picture with more genuine heart appeal than "Smilin' Through," with Norma Talmadge's latest starring vehicle—been brought to Atlanta, and for sheer beauty and superbness of acting, it's peer is yet to be filmed.—Carl Taylor, Atlanta Journal.

Book Reviews in Tabloid

E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM.

The Great Prince Shan. By E. Phillips Oppenheim, one of England's greatest novelists. As will be recalled in several of Oppenheim's seventy novels he foretold the war with Germany.

The author's stories of international affairs—diplomatic treachery, etc., made readers eager for his books long before the outbreak of the world war and in 1920 he achieved his greatest success when he wrote "The Great Impersonation."

Mr. Oppenheim's ancestors went to England from Germany, but there was no more loyal Englishman during the great conflict than this popular writer; he was commissioned a major and was attached to the ministry of information.

Germany hated Oppenheim. His name was on the list of dangerous Englishmen to be shot when Germany occupied Great Britain. Why? Because through his fiction stories he warned England of the Teutonic menace.

In his new book of fiction Oppenheim deals with world politics in 1934. "This time, while Germany, hating England for the treaty of Versailles, has a share in the plot, rejuvenated Russia, which refused to join the league of nations, and Japan and China both withdraw from it" are the principal factors.

And then he draws another picture—with America standing aloof and watching, France still convinced that militarism is its only safe policy; with England practically disarmed, "resting comfortably in the false security of the league of nations."

The story of his latest book which he has woven around Prince Shan, cultured ruler of China and who dominates the situation; Lady Maggie Trent, an English girl, spurred on by her fear of the completion of a plot which is being made against her country, uses all her influence to revoke the decision which may once more change the map of the world.

"Oppenheim has a pessimistic outlook on the future of Europe. He does not merely grumble; he makes definite predictions. Within twenty years, he states, there will be another world war. His amazing prophesies relative to the Teutonic menace give added weight to his remarks.

"The Great Prince Shan" is a story of world politics in 1934. In it he develops the train of thought in the above statement concerning the future of Europe, showing us an all-powerful China and an England weak and defenseless, placing her faith in the league of nations. There is intrigue and mystery, plotting and counter plotting, carried through in the style for which Oppenheim is famous." In many ways this book is an answer to those people who were of the opinion that the creator of the "International Spy" would have no more material for his thrilling stories when the world lay in the security and good will of the league.

The great war brought about so many scientific wonders that men cease to wonder at anything occurring on earth, on or under the waters of the ocean, or in the great sea of air above them. The brain of man has become such a marvel in warfare that it is even possible to silence whole regiments and sweep away whole cities. But Oppenheim says "human emotions are static; ambition plays the same havoc with men and nations and romance is never dying." (Little, Brown & Co., Boston.)

THE FRENCH REVOLUTION.

The French Revolution. By George H. Allen, Ph. D., formerly of the University of Pennsylvania, history department, and the military intelligence division of the general staff, Washington; author of "The Great War," etc. This handsome and valuable book is to be used in four volumes, uniform in format with the great war. It is printed and published by George Barrie Sons, Philadelphia.

As an introductory to this important volume the following is quoted: "The great drama of the French revolution."—New York Tribune.

"Anarchy is the most deadly peril which threatens the human race today."—Judge Howard Supreme Court of New York.

"I know of no way in judging the future but by the past."—Patrick Henry.

"The French Revolution' is one of the great epochs in history."—The New York Herald.

"Thoroughly accurate and well balanced."—American Academy.

"Eminently fair and judicial."—The Historical Review.

"It will stand as the authority on the war."—Richmond Times-Dispatch.

"Very valuable for today, but of greater value in future years."—Atlanta Constitution.

"A great work on the greatest event in 2,000 years."—San Francisco Chronicle.

The publishers' note, which consists of some twelve pages, is in itself a most attractive gateway to the story of the French revolution which still lives and from which we quote: ("The fact that we are today in the cycle of revolution with the impulse to revolt against order and ownership constantly increasing, and that many of the great questions that then arose are still unsolved, makes the study of this, the most astonishing period of all history, of the greatest importance."

The preface by the author is a very interesting statement, but, after all, if you sum it up it means nothing more than the first sentence:

"Humanity is still in the throes of a great crisis."

It is the purpose of the author to present an authentic account of the origin, progress and results of the French revolution in this and the following volumes. Some of the most famous works present a comprehensive treatment of the French revolution—and it has found a permanent place in the literature of our own and other tongues.

But there have been more recent investigations and these wonderful volumes will contribute perhaps some new ideas, and as the writer says, "in some measure broaden the view of and clarify the judgment of the many readers who are interested in this subject."

While Dr. Allen's work is written from an American viewpoint, it is told in an honest, straightforward way, and the fog of partisanship does not exist—the French and English bias being avoided and the truth, as it is, being told for the benefit of the public.

The volumes are elaborately illustrated, the material being copies from French, national, municipal and private collections.

There are authentic documents, personal sketches, portraits, paintings and engravings that "act as a mirror reflecting the aspect of the revolution." The table of contents is in itself wonderful—this volume begins with the "Growth of the French Nation" and ends with "The Taking of the Bastile." "It is the great drama of the French revolution." George Barrie's Sons, Philadelphia.)

NEW FICTION.

Lost Valley is the first book of fiction written by Mrs. Katherine Fullerton Gerould, but she has written some of the most powerful short stories of any writer in many many years. For instance "Vail Obligations," "The Great Traditions," etc.

The story goes that Lost Brook rises out of Lost Pond and flows through Lost Valley. "The brook is beautiful—so is the valley, but beauty counts not at all to the valley dwellers," says the author. Once upon a time it was a place of wealth and health, but, like many towns of the same kind of location, those that were able moved away. But, in this instance, Madge Lockerby stayed behind to care for her sister Lola, young and beautiful, but with the mind of a child.

It is a dramatic story and told in Mrs. Gerould's best style, and there is no lack of the intensity or the beauty as in her short stories. (Harper & Brothers, New York.)

The Odds and Other Stories. By Ethel M. Dell, whose reputation as a short story writer has become firmly established. Readers and admirers of her stories are very appreciative in that her stories are being preserved in book form. This volume contains seven stories—all of which are up to the standard of her best work. (G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York.)

Coomer Ali. By S. B. H. Hurst, who in writing of the land and the sea from Calcutta to Mecca, opens up a new world fiction. It is a story of the Far East and is of Coomer Ali, a fiery little Mohammedan who set out for Mecca to blaspheme Allah; Captain Armit, a blacklisted British sea captain, whose opium drams tempted him to try to steal a valuable cargo, and Brown, a Far Eastern half-breed, who spent his time in telling others how to escape punishment from crime on the high seas. The author has lived through many adventures and now, after adventuring over the seven seas, has contributed his experience to readers of fact and fiction. (Harper & Brothers.)

SELECT BOOKS.

The Latest Thing and Other Things. By Alexander Black. These are "adventures in seeing and saying" by the author of "The Great Desire." Among the subjects discussed are: "The Dictatorship of the Dull," "The Truth About Women," "Giving and Taking," "Coincidences," "On Broadway," "Clothes and the Woman," "Heroine Complexes."

These "adventures" or essays were written during 1921—several of them of a more personal cast reflect the interest of an active literary life and others are discussions of his much-talked-about novels, "The Great Desire" and "The Seventh Angel." (Harper & Brothers, New York.)

The Best Short Stories of 1921, and the Year Book of the American Short Story. Edited by Edward J. Obrien, who began compiling and editing the best short stories in 1915. These volumes have become so popular that they can be found on the bookshelf of the author, editor, librarian and teachers of short story writing. Among the list of winners are Sherwood Anderson's story etitled "Brothers," from The Bookman; "Fanutsa," by Bervovici, from "The Dial;" "Darkness," by Irvin S. Cobb, from The Saturday Evening Post; "Under the Dome," by Waldo Frank; "French Eva," by Katherine Fullerton Gerould (Scribner's) ;"The Past," by Ellen Glasgow (Good Housekeeping); "His Smile," by Ellen Glasgow (Pictorial Review) and several others. (Small, Maynard & Co., Boston.)

Saturday Papers. Essays on literature from the Literary Review of The New York Evening Post. By Henry Seidel Canby, William Rose Benet and Amy Loveman.

"Is the American reader's sense of beauty dull?" "Are the magazines really giving what their readers want?" These are questions that are being asked every day. In this small collection of essays on novels and novel readers, movies and art wit and sincerity is fully expressed, for there is a genuine distaste for anything else. (The MacMillan Company, New York.)

MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS.

The Sieve—or Revelations of the Man Mill, being the truth about American immigration. By F. F. Weiss.

For thirteen years Mr. Weiss served as United States immigration and Chinese inspector at the port of Boston and during the war as special agent of the bureau of investigation, United States department of justice. He is widely known as a lecturer, linguist and authority on immigration and in his timely revelations of the man-mill he give the American people the first authentic glimpse of the real facts and secret forces behind our immigration problem.

"The Sieve" is an inspiring and valuable book for every thinking American. (The Page Company, Boston.)

The Modern City and Its Government. By William Parr Capes, who says "city government has undergone so many and radical chagges during the last twenty-five years, the efficiency of public administration has made such rapid progress during the last decade ad the functions of municipal government have increased so rapidly that the citizens of today, especially the women, find it difficult to grasp the true significance of the trend of municipal governmental progress and to judge the merits of the multitude of conflicting claims."

The writer has studied municipal questions in nearly a score of towns and cities from New York to California and has investigated the ways in which each one has endeavored to solve its problems.

Mr. Capes has himself been a student of muicipal problems for many years, while secretary of the New York state conference of mayors and other city officials and director of the New York state bureau of municipal information. (E. P. Dutton & Co., New York city.)

MAGAZINES FOR MAY.

The American Review of Reviews has for its frontispiece a picture of modernized Ireland. And there are interesting articles on "Paris—Three Years After," by Simonds: "How Immigration Laws are Working," by James J. Davis; "Are We Solving the Housing Problem?" by Harlean James; "Why not Insure Farm Crops?" by John M. Stahl; "Women's Responsibility for Food Costs," by Marjorie Shuler, and with the many discussions of topics found under "The Progress of the World," the reader will find himself well posted on international affairs.

Current History Magazine will tell you how Admiral Sims and Admiral Weymss, head of the British navy, disagree on the effects of the naval reductions by the arms conference. Wayne B. Wheeler, the active head of the Anti-Saloon league, who presents his figures to prove that the prohibition laws are producing a moral revolution in this country. Dr. Margolin, one of the chief officials of the Ukraine, has a very impressive article on the history of the Ukraine as a part of the United States of Russia, and there are numerous other articles equally as interesting and instructive, with illustrations, also a survey of the happenings in the past thirty days in the forty leading countries of the world.

The Forum has an article which will be very interesting to the U. S. A.—entitled "Marshal Foch's Impressions of the United States," with "America's Young Radicals," by George Santayana; "Canal Tolls and American Honor;" "Labor, the New Tyrant," by J. B. W. Gardner; "Drama of Sex, Disaster and Hope," by Roland Holt, interesting discussions about books and several select poems—among them being one by Miss Mary Brent Whitesides, of Atlanta.

The Drama is a monthly review of the allied arts of the theater, sponsored by the Drama League of America.

The Double Dealer—A national magazine from the south. Published at New Orleans, and while it is not more than a year old, it has been received with a warm hand of welcome not only in America, but in Europe.

LITERARY DRIFTWOOD.

Booksellers in all parts of the United States are busy making plans to assemble in Washigton on May 8 for the annual convention of the American Booksellers' association. Many prominent speakers are to address the meetings and open discussion is promised of all problems pertaining to book selling.

W. L. George, whose new book, "Ursula Trent," has brought him added fame, is in Diego, Cal., after a tour of the U. S. A.

Basil King, whose latest novel, "The Empty Sack," which has caused much discussion, while in New York city was the guest of honor at the Gamut club one evening.

Did you know that Charlie Chaplin, who is now the well-known author since writing "My Trip Abroad," is convalescing from the flu? Mr. Chaplin is not only pleased, but very much surprised at the warm reception he has received in the literary world. Frances Hackett writes: "Two young men of our generation have great celebrity—Charlie Chaplin and the Prince of Wales."

Asked to suggest recent American novels of the value of "Growth of the Soil" or "If Winter Comes" Mrs. May Lamberton Becker, of The New York Evening Post, selects Booth Tarkington's "Alice Adams." "That is," she thinks, "a novel that could not be improved. The oftener I read it, the more I respect it. But I always leave out one chapter: I have never read this through; it is the account of the dinner.

"I would no more finish that than I would watch an automobile run over a dog."

At a recent meeting in New York of the American Poetry society, after an evening spent in minute analysis and technical discussion of poems submitted anonymously, Robert Nichols sat on a table and read some of Siegfried Sassoon's vital and smashing poems. The effect was as if he had torn off the room and pushed down the walls, letting in wind and stars and street noises.

These two young British poets are intimate friends.

Dixie Presbyterians To Meet in Charleston For General Assembly

Presbyteries throughout the synod have elected commissioners for the meeting of the general assembly of the Southern Presbyterian church in Charleston, W. Va., on May 18. This is the sixty-second gathering of this religious body, the first being held in Augusta, Ga., in 1861, when it was decided to leave the general assembly of the Presbyterian church of the United States of America and organize the Presbyterian church in the United States. For the past several years there have been various committees appointed for a reunion not only of these two branches but closer relations with other Presbyterian bodies. This will be one of the matters considered at this meeting.

This assembly will be known as an "Evangelistic Assembly," special attention being paid to this branch of church work. A number of important reports will be made by the executive committees, including those on foreign and home missions, Christian education and ministerial relief, publication, Sabbath school work, etc.

The following are among the commissioners from this synod: Rev. E. L. Hill, Athens; Rev. F. K. Sims, Dalton; Rev. T. K. Currie, Columbus; Rev. F. M. Baldwin, Mt. Vernon; A. J. Griffeth, Comer; Robert McMillan, Acworth; R. E. Huie, Cordele; A. G. Miller, Waycross.

Dr. E. L. Connally Celebrates His Eighty-Fifth Birthday

When Dr. E. L. Connally celebrated his eighty-fifth birthday Saturday afternoon, another outstanding fact was recorded in that it marked his seventy-ninth year of residence in Atlanta.

Nursed by Indians.

Dr. Connally was born in Floyd county, ten miles from Rome, Ga., and he was nursed by two Indian chiefs, for at that time the Cherokees lived in north Georgia. When he was six years old he was brought by his parents to Atlanta. During the civil war he served as assistant surgeon in the First Confederate regiment, composed of men from Georgia and Mississippi. He was first stationed at Pensacola, Fla., then Mobile, Ala., and lastly at Albany, Ga. He was married forty-eight years ago in April to Miss Mary Brown, daughter of the late Governor Joseph E. Brown and Mrs. Brown, who were two of the most prominent people in the state. Dr. Connally enjoys perfect health, and often walks from the center of town to West End.

"The Homestead."

Dr. and Mrs. Connally have always entertained at "The Homestead," their home in West End, and the event of yesterday was one of royal hospitality and sentiment.

Throughout the house spring flowers such as sweet syringa and flag lilies from the garden filled baskets and bowls.

In the dining room, the lace-covered table had for the central decoration a large three-tiered birthday cake, which was richly embossed in roses. Surrounding this were eighty-five silver and crystal candlesticks, holding unshaded pink candles. Each candlestick was ornamented with a pink butterfly. At one end of the table was a bronze engraved "Grow old with me,

The best is yet to be."

Mrs. John Spalding read the poem, "Four Score Years," after which she presented a copy, with a photograph of Dr. Connally at the top of the poem, to each of the guests present.

Many telegrams and flowers were sent as tributes to this distinguished and popular citizen. The guests included relatives and a group of friends who were over eighty years of age.

Receiving Party.

Mrs. John Spalding, Mrs. Warner Martin, Mrs. Hal Hentz and Thomas W. Connally, children of Dr. and Mrs. Connally, and their granddaughters, Misses Mary Brown, Constance, Frances, Sally and Elizabeth Spalding, assisted in entertaining. The late Captain Joseph Brown Connally, a hero of the world war, was the elder son of these beloved pioneers.

Mrs. Connally was gowned in black lace veiling black satin. Mrs. Spalding's gown was of black lace combined with chiffon and satin.

Mrs. Hal Hentz wore a gown of green Georgette crepe, crystal beaded. Mrs. Warner Martin wore pink chiffon.

Home Economics Work to Be Displayed at Woman's Club

The new auditorium of the Atlanta Woman's club will be a colorful scene Monday, May 15, when the home economics department of the club will hold its final meeting of the year under the chairmanship of Mrs. Newton C. Wing, who has had charge of this feature of the club's work for four years.

Mrs. Norman Pool, divisional chairman for the Smith-Hughes vocational classes, will have charge of the arrangement of the program, assisted by Mrs. J. A. Carlisle, divisional chairman for the Atlanta Woman's club cookbook, which has also been an important feature of this department's work.

The work of the Smith-Hughes classes, which consist of sewing, draughting, interior decorating, cooking and millinery, will form the feature part of the program. An elaborate setting has been provided for the fashion display, which, under the direction of Mesdames Mae Bailey and C. W. Bellfus and Miss Bunce, teachers of millinery and draughting and sewing classes, have been preparing for this event.

Mrs. William Claer Spiker will direct the 50 or more participants in the fashion show, so that as they pass across the stage, they will fittingly display the artistic gowns and hats. Miss Marie Haines, director of the classes in interior decorating, will have charge of the decorations. The refreshments will be in charge of the cooking classes, under the direction of the home economics department of the Girls' High school, of which Miss Cone is the head. The judges awarding the prizes in the display and in the discovery contest will be Mrs. Irving Thomas, president of the club during the first two years in the present quarters and by whom Mrs. Wing was first appointed chairman of home economics; Mrs. B. M. Boykin, the present president of the club; the vice presidents of the club, Mesdames Alonzo Richardson and Norman Sharp, and the parliamentarian, Mrs. Hamilton Douglas. Beautiful prizes have been given by friends of the club and of the department, this feature being in charge of Mrs. J. A. Carlisle.

The boxes will be occupied by the judges, and guests of the occasion will by Mayor Key, Secretary Barker, of th. chamber of commerce; Superintendent Sutton, Miss Mary Cresswell, head of the woman's home economics department of the State Agricultural college; Miss Epsie Campbell, in charge of the state's Smith-Hughes work, and T. W. Clift, in charge of the local Smith-Hughes work; Mrs. Annie Wise, Miss Jessie Muse and Guy Moore, principals of the various high schools where the department classes are taught, together with the teachers of the classes. Last, but not least in importance, will be the little mascot of the home economics department, Ernest Covington, the 5-months-old son of one of the chairmen.

A program of music and readings is announced by Mrs. Pool.

The members of the department are asked to note the change in date from the regular meeting to the date of Monday, the 15th.

Welfare Work Of Woman's Club Makes Record

With the presentation of the pageant, "The Call of Spring," the public welfare department of the Atlanta Woman's club rounds out a full and remarkable year of achievement, of which the organization of a children's division is an important part.

The officers of this department are Mrs. E. H. Goodhart, chairman; Mrs. Frances Brown Chase, secretary, and Mrs. Charles Goodman, treasurer and press chairman. The divisional chairman are Mrs. S. F. Boykin, juvenile court work; Mrs. Alyce Taylor, auditorium; Mrs. John A. Manget, clothing.

The children's division and the Girl Scouts are in this department, and the ward for tubercular children at Battle Hill is under the supervision of a committee from this department, headed by Mrs. Alonzo Richardson. Only a year ago it started, and a night and a day matron care for their needs, with Miss McKinna as head of the ward. Working in co-operation with the welfare department Dr. Bradfield, of Battle Hill, and the Anti-Tuberculosis association secured from city council an appropriation which made possible the establishment of the ward.

Cares for Baby.

The child welfare division of the department also cares for a baby at the Georgia Children's home and provides for the expenses of educating a girl of fourteen at the Agricultural college at Powder Springs. Mrs. Philip Graves is chairman of the committee which regards as its special responsibility the assisting of this young girl.

As chairman of the clothing committee, Mrs. John A. Manget, has distributed hundreds of garments where a lift of this kind has been most needed.

Mrs. Alyce Taylor has done wonderful work as head of the department's auditorium committee, having added $300 to the fund for equipment of the auditorium.

The welfare department has done a great thing for the community in working untiringly for a year toward the establishment of a new detention home for juvenile offenders. Mrs. S. F. Boykin is chairman of this division, and with her committee meet weekly and monthly with the county commissioners, and with other interested groups until the accomplishment of the task at the opening of this new home in February.

Under the direction of Mrs. Goodhart and Mrs. Charles Goodman, who is also chairman of child welfare for the fifth district of the state federation, Baby week was a notable achievement in a wonderful record. Physicians throughout the city feel that the annual baby motarlity of summer time dreaded by every mother, will be appreciably lessened by the examinations conducted during Baby week in eleven permanent and five temporary centers.

Democratic Attendance.

Nothing more democratic could be imagined than the attendance at the centers. More than a thousand babies were examined, all children being required to be under school age. The eleven permanent centers were under the supervision of Dr. Kennedy and the city nurses. Three temporary centers were officially recognized and charts made at these centers were accepted at all permanent centers. One temporary center was at Moreland Avenue school, and one at the Atlanta Woman's club. Three were conducted by the Anti-Tuberculosis association, two of them being for negro children. At the request of the resident Red Cross nurse a temporary center was also conducted at Camp McElroy for the 50 families resident for vocational training. No better argument for eugenics could have been found than an examination of these babies, most of them being perfect specimens of babyhood. It was whispered among the examiners that doctors and nurses alike fell in love with these charming children, whose fathers were mostly the flower of American manhood whose physical sacrifices on the battle field had necessitated retraining for commercial occupations.

The Woman's club center was conducted by Mrs. Alyce Taylor under the direction of the noted baby specialist, Dr. W. N. Adkins. A corps of doctors and nurses lent their assistance.

Mrs. Johnson received her guests in the canopied terrace, which was gaily festooned with garlands of roses and honeysuckle. Over one hundred guests were present. Among the guests was the "Wake Up Daddy" organization, which is backing the Watkins Atlanta plan charter, who are standing behind the women in this section of the city in their fight for clean and efficient government. The speakers of the evening were Edgar Watkins, Horace Russell, Mrs. Sanford Gay and Mr. Van Buren, who made a very scholarly address on the science of good government.

Among the district chairmen present were Mrs. Murray Howard, Mrs. Frederick C. Rice, Mrs. J. W. Masseling, Mrs. B. W. Bird, Mrs. Ed Pierce, Mrs. G. H. Howard and Mrs. Chester Johnson, the hostess. Mrs. B. W. Bird has been conducting registration parties during the entire week and women are waking up to their responsibilities as citizens in this section.

Decatur Women Push Registration.

Decatur, Ga., May 6.—Just one more day to work, the registration committee of the Decatur League of Women voters reported to the league at its meeting held in the courthouse Friday afternoon, that definite reports could not be obtained, but that the women were responding very well. Registration had been going on all day; not a few registering just prior to the meeting.

The Oakhurst hour was a busy one for Mr. Talley, between thirty and forty registering in that period.

The meeting was addressed by Mrs. Harry Chamberlin, of Atlanta, whose talk on the Baltimore convention of the National League of Women Voters and the Pan-American congress instructive in its comparisons and delightful in its characterizations. At this meeting a constitution and by-laws as was adopted. Plans for a "better citizenship" meeting were urged by Mrs. King, president of the W. C. T. U.

Children to Take Part In Beautiful Pageant At Club Auditorium

One of the most picturesque and beautiful events of the year will be hte pageant, "The Call of Spring," which the children's division of the Atlanta Woman's club will present at the club auditorium theater Saturday afternoon, May 13.

This pageant was written by Mrs. Earl Sherwood Jackson, author of "The Gift," the Christmas pageant presented at the auditorium for the past five years, and other poetic dramas. It was adapted from Louise M. Alcott's flower fable, "The Frost King," and is an exquisite combination of dancing, dramatic interpretation and music, with 150 children in the ensemble and speaking roles. Mrs. Jackson, the director, is assisted by Mrs. Harvey L. Parry in the training of the dancers. Mrs. Jackson has charge of the staging, dramatic effect, pantomimes and songs.

The story is colorful and furnishes wide opportunity for talent in dancing and dramatic interpretation. It is all about fairies and frost sprites, fairy queens and frost kings—there are fairies of all kinds: fairy flowers, butterflies, bees, will o' the wisps and sprites of beauty, love and song. The fairy queen of flowers calls her court together to warn them that the Great Frost King means to slay them. Miss Nellie Sullivan portrays the part of the queen and Irene Shepherdson, leader of the Woman's Club Girl Scout troops, the king. The queen has sent envoys to the king, begging him to leave the flowers unharmed and accept rare gifts in exchange for their lives. The king has refused to hear their plea. The humblest flower of all, the violet, offers to go to the king with a gift of fairy love. Dorothy Keeling is the little violet.

The scene changes to the land of ice and snow, where the frost king and his sprites reign together with the cold north winds and keep eternal revel. Here Violet dares to go with her enchanted wreath. With his icy breath the king tries to kill her, but love's magic mantle keeps her warm. The lovely wreath is torn to shreds by the frost sprites, but the flowers whose golden cups are filled with love untold can never die, even in this icy air.

In chains Violet is bound and left to die alone, but the spirits of Beauty, Love and Song appear in answer to her prayer, and, taking up hte scattered flowers, they begin to tie them on the barren trees. The king, returning, sees what has happened and repents. The finale shows the wedding of Summer and Winter—te frost king throwing aside his mantle of silvery sheen for one of tender green.

Dinners and Music To be Featured.

This story is interwoven in the dances and music. An orchestra of prominent musicians will play the accompaniments. Miss Bannie Marie Hood, who plays the part of the Spirit of Song will interpolate a number of songs during the pageant, including "The Will o' the Wisp" by Spross, "Where the Bee Sucks," "Fairy Pipers," and "The Message of the Violet."

Following are the principals in the cast: Queen of the Fairies, Miss Nellie Sullivan; Frost King, Miss Irene Shepherdson; Violet, Dorothy Keeling; Spirit of Spring, Virginia Turman; Love, Thelma Chalman; Beauty, Patricia Sanders; Will o' the Wisp, Freda Sullivan; Bee, Lois Spies, Spirit of Music, Raymer Johnson.

All dressed in white and looking like a wonderful garden of white violets, this precious aggregation of young America will occupy the boxes in company with the officers of the Woman's club at the presentation of their pageant, and the entire afternoon will be a gala occasion, bringing together the children of the members of the Atlanta Woman's club and their little friends and the Atlanta Woman's club Girl Scout troop which has 24 members, and is led by Miss Irene Shepardson. The children's division is looking forward to becoming a separate department another year with its own officers and representation on the executive board.

Election of Officers At Woman's Club Monday Afternoon

Dr. Rabbi Marx, orator, will be the speaker of the afternoon at the regular meeting of the Atlanta Woman's club tomorrow afternoon in the new auditorium-theater. Dr. Marx is a brilliant speaker, noted for his humor, and will discuss the new citizenship of women.

Miss Annabelle Wood, pianist, will play a group of musical numbers. Miss Wood is one of Atlanta's most talented musicians and is a teacher of piano in the Brenau studio. She has achieved no little success in New York before returning to Atlanta, which is her home.

A group of twenty boys compose the Boys' Higgh school orchestra, which will be an unusual attraction on the afternoon's program. This group was organized by P. M. Epps, instructor of Latin and Greek, and a musician of note. Mr. Epps, a lover of music himself, desired to place before the high school boys the opportunity of knowing music and executing it. Later Mr. Charles Gesser, concert master of the Howard theater, became interested in the boys, and for the past year has directed and coached this group. The results have been very remarkable and the Boys' club is delighted to have the Boys' High orchestra and in this way stimulate interest in music in the public schools.

The most important piece of business to be brought before the club will be the election of officers. The officers nominated by the nominating committee who will be voted upon are Mrs. B. M. Boykin, president; Mrs. Norman Sharp, first vice president; Mrs. Alonzo Richardson, second vice president; Mrs. R. K. Rambo, recording secretary; Mrs. W. F. Molton, assistant recording secretary; Mrs. Bun Wylie, corresponding secretary; Mrs. A. R. Colcord, treasurer; Mrs. H. H. McCall, auditor.

Payment of Dues Urged.

It is urged that dues be paid at this meeting, as only members presenting the new blue membership card will be allowed to attend. The treasurer will be at the door to receive these dues. In view of the heavy operating expense of the club and the desire to keep a close count of the membership, it is highly desirable that all members in arrears pay promptly.

Psi Omegas Give Farewell Dinner-Dance to Seniors

At nine o'clock Dr. Claude N. Hughes—toast master—drew the curtains and invited those present into the ball room where dinner was served at tables arranged around the outer edge. Beautiful cut flowers in the pastel shades were used to decorate the tables. From the ceiling long streamers of blue and white flowed to the outer edge of the room and at one end of the hall hung a blue and white Psi Omega banner.

Prize Pictures To Be Shown At Art Exhibit

The Inman prize of $50 given annually at the disposal of the Atlanta Art association for the best picture in its annual exhibition goes this year to Miss Marion Otis for a landscape of "Piedmont Park in Early Spring."

Honorable mention is given to Miss M. A. H. Smith for an oil portrait, to Mrs. Osgood Wynne for an oil landscape, and to Mrs. Gilliam for a "Pastel Portrait Head."

The judges awarding the prizes are Gutzon Borglum, the well-known sculptor; Miss Charlotte Smith, director of drawing in the public schools, and John Dubois, a Chicago artist, who has recently come to Atlanta to make his home.

The jury of selection for entrance to the exhibition consists of Mrs. Clarence Blosser, Mrs. E. W. More, Wilbur Kurtz, Miss Ruth Northen and Mrs. Marvin Underwood.

The list of exhibiting artists contains many well-known names and a few new ones. Miss Virginia Woolley has some clever garden scenes, the fruit of a recent visit to Charleston; Miss Marine Haines has a novel lunette done in Gesso work, and a Batik panel, as well as some oils done in Provincetown. Mrs. Herbert Dean Oliver has a charming and sincere little nude in oils, Miss Kate Edwards has two of her ever-popular chalk drawings, and Miss Nell Van Hook has some heads modeled in plaster.

Others attracting attention are still life studies by Mrs. Young and Mrs. McKinley, some landscapes by Miss Carraway, Mrs. Turner and Mrs. Cooper; a flower study by Miss Whitner, a portrait drawing by Mrs. Pressley Howard, and some etched book plates by Francis Smith, of the Georgia Tech.

A vote will be taken during the exhibition for the most popular picture.

The exhibition will be held at the Georgia Art Supply company, at 65 South Broad street. It will be open to the public for two weeks, commencing Monday, May 8.

Fulton High Gave Play Friday Evening

The senior class of Fulton High school presented, under the able direction of Miss Sallie Shannon and Miss Belle Cooper, a three-act comedy, entitled "A Scrap of Paper," at Eagleston hall, Friday evening.

The action of the story was rapid, and, although amateurs, the participants due to natural ability and clever training, held the individual interest of the audience throughout the entire play. Mildred Duncan, as M'Olle Sussanne de Russeville and Albert Happoldt as Prosper Couramont deserve especial mention.

Credit is due Gineus Smith and Hoyt Williams for the unusual and attractive stage setting.

The cast was as follows: Louise Willingham, Mildred Duncan, Emma Plaster, Valeria Campbell, Vivian Sheridan, Mary Knox, Frank Pitcher, Albert Happoldt, Almo Patton, Louis Brown, Herbert Meadows and James De'Jarnette. Music for the evening was furnished by the Fulton High band under the leadership of their bandmaster, Captain Major.

Herbert Meadows, business manager of the play awarded two boxes of candy, one to Rosalette Campbell, the other to Callie Patton, for seling the greatest number of tickets to the comedy.

It has been the custom of Fulton High school for the past few years to have the senior class stage a play three weeks before graduation. Great interest centers around this dramatic performance of the school year, both in the student body and among the Fulton patrons.

A chorus of women's voices is being organized, and a patriotic community singing is being planned, to be held at the monument on July 4, and all College Park is expected to participate in this open-air concert. The club expects to organize a junior club at a later date.

Success of Y. W. C. A. Fashion Show And Carnival

The Y. W. C. A. Girl Reserves' fashion show given at the Atlanta Woman's club Saturday afternoon and the Y. W. C. A. Club Federation carnival given at administration headquarters Saturday afternoon and night, marked the two most successful entertainments that have ever been given in the history of the Young Women's Christian association.

Fashion Show.

The purpose of the fashion show was to demonstrate to the school girls of Atlanta that they may dress charmingly upon all occasions by wearing the simple, inexpensive dresses that all school girls should wear. There was nothing of a prating nature in the fashion show. Each girl in the audience was free to make her own decisions on what is in good taste for her to wear and from the manner in which some of the girls were seen rubbing paint from their faces, the lesson taught by the occasion was a good one. As the reserves, as living models, appeared upon the auditorium stage, dressed in costumes loaned them by the J. P. Allen Co., sensible girlish slippers, their hair worn girlishly, their faces minus paint and powder, each model was applauded and no one doubted that the school girl, in her natural youthful charm and beauty excels in charm and manner the typical girl of the day who has unfortunately earned for herself the name of "flapper." It seemed to the audience that after the shoe demonstration that was given by M. Rich & Bros. Co., showing the kind of pretty, sensible slippers or shoes that young girls should wear, that never again will the girls who attended the fashion show be seen wearing high-heeled shoes. Those who took the leading parts in the fashion show program were Miss Mayna Brace, Y. W. C. A. Girls work secretary; Professor Guy A. Moore, principal of Fulton High School; Miss John Bowie, modiste, and R. L. Coggins of M. Rich & Bros. Co. The reserves, as models were Ruth Palmer, Mary Knox, Christina Maier, Irwin Nichols, Clyde Edmonson, Ruth Satterwhite, Mary Florence, Evelyn Titus, Ximena Liddell, Carmen Mather, Marguerite Baker, Betty James, Helen Modie, Doris Mason and Louise Cawthorne.

There are 350 Y. W. C. A. girl reserves in Atlanta's grade and high schools. The reserve work is a department of the local association and a regular department of work by the national Y. W. C. A. Earnestness in character, looking for the best in life and girlish simplicity in manner and dress are outstanding features in the girl reserve code.

Carnival.

Following the fashion show at 4:30 o'clock, the Y. W. C. A. club federation's carnival was held at the Y. W. C. A. headquarters, Peachtree Arcade, that lasted until 10 o'clock Saturday night. At the closing hour the pennies, nickels and dimes that had been taken in had not been counted and the proceeds will not be known until tellers in a local bank give their expert report to the girls Monday morning.

The carnival was a true one in spirit and attendance. The patrons were coming and going from the opening until the closing hour. Bob Murphy and his accompanist, Shay Vincent, drew the largest crowd during the evening. Thee booths were popular and the skating rink had its full share of skaters and spectators.

Florists of the city had donated cut flowers that aded beauty to the scene and the balloons and red and green streamers gave the desired carnival effect to the setting.

Th eight clubs of the federation were loud in their appreciation of the aid they had received in their carnival not only from other Y. W. clubs, but from many of Atlanta's leading young people and men and women of talent.

The proceeds of the carnival will be used by the club federation for sending their delegates to the Y. W. C. A. industrial conference to be held this summer at Lake Junaluska. During the fashion show girl reserves sold home-made cakes, and candies, the proceeds of which will be used to send delegates to the Y. W. C. A. Girl Reserve conference to be held this summer at Camp Highland, Georgia.

Miss Wells Gives Dinner Party.

Miss Lillian Wells was the hostess at a lovely dinner party Monday evening at the home of her parents, on South Church street, in East Point.

The officers of the Atlanta Shorter alumnae are Mrs. Harrold Cooledge, president; Mrs. Robert Mitchell, treasurer, and Mrs. Howell Cobb Erwin, secretary.

Atlanta Child's Home Makes Appeal.

An appeal is made through the press for baby beds to be donated the Atlanta Child's home, at 312 Angier avenue, so that emergency cases may be handled. The beds will be called for if Ivy 7567 is notified.

Musical Tea At Mrs. Logan's.

A musical silver tea will be sponsored by Circle No. 7 of St. Mark's church on Friday, May 12, at 4 o'clock, at the residence of Mrs. Frank Logan, 731 Piedmont avenue.

Miss Mary A. Battle, formerly of Augusta, will sing, and other artists on the program will include violin and piano solos by Misses Videtto and Printup.

Banquet Is Given By Bible Class.

A very unique and interesting social event of the past week was an elaborate banquet given by the active membership of the Twentieth Century Bible class of the First Baptist church in the large dining hall of the church building.

This ba quet, which is said to have been one of the most complete and elaborate of its kind held in the city in some time, marked the beginning of a complete re-organization of the class for the betterment of its operation both as a religious and as an organization for the social welfare of its members. An elaborate program for the future activities of the class was presented for the sanction of those present which included plans for regular social events. A. L. Bloomer, superintendent in charge of the First Baptist Sunday school, was a guest at the banquet and offered very welcome suggestions. W. W. Orr, one of Atlanta's most public spirited citizens and an orator of unusual ability, is the very popular teacher of the class.

The banquet was planned and prepared under the supervision of Mrs. Jesse L. Morrison, who assisted by Mrs. Armstrong Mrs. L. S. Butler, Mrs. J. O. Anderson, Miss Emma Winn and Miss Sarah Baker.

The members of the class present were: R. E. Flournoy, Roscoe Burdett, Lawrence Burdett, Raymond Flournoy, H. W. Almand, D. O. Dougherty, L. S. Butler, C. J. Watts, J. L. Morrison, I. L. Crawford, L. J. Bateman, Roy Ketchum, J. O. Anderson, A. O. Patrick, W. W. Brown, H. E. Reams, W. M. Pearson, Moreland Maddox, W. W. Orr and Ted V. Morrison. Write to her for blanks.

The "Alice Mitchell Walker" silver loving cup, offered by your state president, will be given to the chapter reporting the greatest number of records of world war veterans residing in any section of Georgia. It will not be given on the percentage basis this year.

The general organization, U. D. C., has named the $50,000 educational fund now being raised by all the states "hero fund," which stands as our first tribute of love and admiration for our veterans in khaki. Mrs. S. G. Lang, Sandersville, will receive money for this fund.

It is our purpose to complete the fund for our Georgia room in the museum at Richmond this year. Give as liberally as possible to this cause. Mrs. Walker Jordan, Hawkinsville, Ga., is chairman.

College Park Chapter Has Election of Officers

College Park, Ga., May 6.—(Special.)—At the call of the president, Mrs. Howard Stakely, the Robert E. Lee chapter assembled at 3:30 o'clock Tuesday, May 2, for the reading of annual reports and election of officers.

The following ladies were unanimously chosen to serve the chapter during the ensuing year: President, Mrs. Howard Stakely; first vice president, Mrs. Eva L. Thornton; second vice president, Mrs. E. G. Harris; recording secretary, Mrs. Beulah Crouch; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Oscar Palmour; treasurer, Miss Mary Gray, auditor; Mrs. J. B. McCain; registrar, Mrs. B. D. Gray; historian, Mrs. Edwin Lang.

Mrs. Stakely was elected last September to fill an unexpired term, and although only seven months' work could be reported, yet the results are most gratifying. Mrs. Stakely was given genuine and hearty thanks for her skillful and remarkable leadership of the crapter's best interests. All objects included in the state's calendar have received the careful and proper attention of the chapter. A most creditable report can be made in October to the state convention.

Mrs. L. A. Brown, chairman of hospitality, made her final report, as she will leave June 1 for her future home, Decatur, Ga. On behalf of the chapter Mrs. Stakely presented to Mrs. Brown the beautiful U. D. C. pin as a slight token of appreciation for valuable and much treasured service rendered the chapter throughout the past eight years, during Mrs. Brown's residence in College Park.

Since September membership blanks have been issued to thirty-seven new members. The scrapbook committee, through the chairman, Mrs. Leo Stillman, reported valuable contributions received from Mr. Bruce and from Atlanta's beloved poet, Charles W. Hubner.

The committee on memorials reported an impressive observance of April 26, at which time the public schools of College Park, under the leadership of Superintendent L. O. Freeman and his efficient corps of teachers decorated forty-eight graves of Confederate veterans and world war vetesans in our own beautiful College Park cemetery. At the early hour of 9 o'clock that beautiful Memorial day the Robert E. Lee chapter and all interested friends met at the monument to our world war heroes, and with befitting ceremonies paid tribute to our noble dead. L. O. Freeman was master of ceremonies.

Memorial Day Observed

From every city, town and county, where there is an organization of U. D. C. comes reports of appropriate exercises in honor of Memorial day. Surely Georgia is not lacking in her observance of this day so sacred to the south. There not being space in which to give all of them only a few will be mentioned in which special observances were made.

DECATUR.

The Agnes Lee chapter, which is named for the daughter of General Robert E. Lee, unveiled a tablet in memory of General Joe Wheeler, who gave gallant services in and around Atlanta during the battle of Atlanta.

Two daughters of General Wheeler, Mrs. William J. Harris and Miss Wheeler, were present and took part in the exercises, for which a most attractive program had been arranged by the president of the chapter, Mrs James Alexander Campbell.

COVINGTON.

The program of the Covington chapter was especially interesting for two reasons, which were that the children took an active part in the exercises and that the exercises were held at the cemetery. Dr. J. A. Sharp, of Emory university academy, Oxford, was the speaker of the day, and at noon a beautiful luncheon was served the veterans and their wives.

Week's Events Of Interest At Agnes Scott

The senior class of Agnes Scott college presented the annual mock opera last Thursday evening, May 4. This event is much looked forward to by the entire college community every year and a full house witnessed the production of "William Fell" produced unde. the joint authorship of Misses Laura Oliver, Frances Harper and Elizabeth Wilson.

The Pippen ballet, appearing for the first time under the auspices of the Senior Opera company with its premiere danseuse, Miss Ruth Keiser, made a wonderful hit.

Miss Althea Stephens conducted the orchestra and the opera was given in three acts in English.

On Wednesday afternoon from 5 to 6 o'clock the Decatur branch of the alumnae of Agnes Scott college entertained the day students at an unusually delightful tea given in the alumnae house.

On May 4 Hoasc, one of the honor societies at Agnes Scott college, announced the newly-elected members. Hoasc is a force in the college which is quiet but powerful. Its purpose is to stimulate effort along the lines of college activty and to further the development of the college in every way within its power. Hoasc is an organization which promotes the best phases of college life and which upholds the highest ideals of Agnes Scott. Every spring girls from the junior class are elected to be members of Hoasc during their senior year in college.

Those girls elected this year are Misses Quenelle Harrold, Elizabeth McClure, Eleanor Hyde, Eloise Knight, Hilda McConnell and Alice Virden. Membership in Hoasc is an honor which comes only to those girls who have definitely expressed their devotion to their alma mater by their enthusiastic and unselfish participation in those activities which aid in the realization of Agnes Scott's ideal.

On Saturday night, May 13, the Glee club of Agnes Scott will present the "Gitana," and operetta. The story of the cantata is that of Zayda, the daughter of the king of Spain, who has been stolen by gypsies in her infancy.

The operetta will be given out on the campus. Besides the many beautiful choruses there will be several dances around the gypsy camp fire. The Glee club has been working hard and we feel sure that the "Gitana" is to be one of the big events of the year at Agnes Scott.

The students of the piano and expression department of Agnes Scott college will give a recital in the college Tuesday evening, May 9, at 8:30 o'clock. Those taking part will be Misses Minnie Liebheit, Bessie Winston, Mabel Kirby Witherspoon, Dorothy Keith, Mary White Caldwell, Valeria Posey, Frances White, Marguerite Cousins, Jennie Lynn Du Vall

A State and National Woman on Prohibition

Mrs. August Burghard, Macon, State Director of Publicity, Georgia W. C. T. U.

At the recent meeting of the State Federation of Labor in Macon, a resolution was introduced seeking to put the organization on record as favoring a modification of the Volstead code to permit the manufacture and sale of wine and beer. The resolution was promptly, emphatically and wisely voted down.

In this connection, the following article from the pen of a well-known Georgia woman, Mrs. Marvin Williams, vice president of the Georgia Woman's Christian Temperance union, recently of Atlanta, now residing in Augusta, her husband, Rev. Marvin Williams having been sent from Grace church, Atlanta, to serve as pastor St. James church, Augusta, will prove of interest because of the soundness of its logic. It first appeared as a signed letter in The Augusta Chronicle, then as a reprint in The Union Signal, the national W. C. T. U. official organ.

Mrs. Williams' Letter.

"To any one who is accustomed to think things through, the statement of the executive council of the American Federation of Labor, as given out by the Associated Press, concerning the modification of the Volstead act so as to permit the sale of light wines and beer, is nothing short of amazing in its hint of compromise with the anarchistic element in the nation, and amazing, yes, most amazing, in the appeal with which it concludes. But, perhaps, the most absurd position taken by the executive council of the A. F. L. is that, since we have an 'army of bootleggers,' 'thousands of moonshiners,' 'increase in crime and insanity,' 'increase in unemployment,' 'increase in taxes' and a few more things, the one and only remedy for them is to allow the bootleggers and moonshiners to operate legally. Just modify the laws so that they can legally sell light wines and beer and then we will have no trouble at all. Nobody will think of wanting to sell rye or corn or any thing at all but the legal drinks. Can any sane, thinking man believe this for one moment? Use the same reasoning for other laws that we have.

"I read an editorial in The Chronicle only a few days ago, in which it was claimed that one hundred million dollars' worth of automobiles were stolen yearly. The editorial stated that 'Many laws with heavy penalties attached have been enacted. Many arrests have been made but it is difficult to secure convictions, and not perceptible slackening of the lawlessness is apparent.'

"Let the executive council prescribe. Would it be this? 'Call upon all citizens to help in having a law passed which will permit the legal stealing of Ford's and Chevrolets?' Why not? Surely, this vast army of law-breakers must not be tolerated and our taxes will be increased or have been increased immensely in the effort to apprehend and convict these law-breakers: therefore legalize the theft of Fords and Cherolets and we will have no further trouble. The law would be so much easier to enforce. The big cars can be so much more easily identified and so on and so on.

"But it is not the easiest thing in the world to fool the average laboring man. This is not the first time the leaders of the federation have tried to influence the rank and file against the prohibitory law and, to the eternal credit of many a labor union in dear old Georgia, be it said, they refused to pass resolutions 'suggested' by these leaders and stood true and firm 'For God and Home and Native Land.' We do not believe that in Georgia or elsewhere American labor is going to endorse the movement of the executive council to license lig t wines and beer.'

"They did not in Georgia."

Decreased Drunkenness Increased Prosperity.

Evangeline Booth, Commander of the Salvation Army in the United States, in a statement just issued, published in The New York Times, declares that since the enactment of the Volstead act drunkness among the poor has almost entirely disappeared. The announceemnt, she said was based on facts reported by secretaries of the Salvation Army in all parts of the country to whom she sent a questionnaire regarding their observations in Salvation Army headquarters, shelters and hotels.

"Our social secretaries replied that cases of drunkenness are now the exception among men who frequent our hostelries, shelters and industrial homes," the survey said.

"In refutation to the charge that drunkenness has increased since prohibition, Commander Booth cites the fact that the Salvation Army's annual 'Boozers' day,' when drunken men and women were collected from the streets, fed, clothed and prayed with, has been abandoned and the day has been given over to entertaining the newsboys and poor youngsters of the city.

"Because prohibition has cleared our park benches of drunkards we are able to entertain 5,000 boys under fourteen years old in New York city on this day, these boys being benefitted because one of the greatest curses of humanity has been placed beyond the reach of men and women."

Salvation Army's Consistency.

The press of recent dates has contained another news item about the Salvation Army which shows its commendable consistency. No social welfare organization has been more outspoken against the liquor traffic and the disastrous effect of alcohol upon human health and happiness than has the Salvation Army. It therefore was a foregone conclusion that Evangeline Booth, the commander of the Army in the United States should ask James Speyer to resign from the chairmanship of the Army's $500,000 drive when she learned that he had accepted office in the National Association Against the Prohibition amendment.

The scientific temperance essay contests of the Woman's Christian Temperance union were again endosed and active co-oneration pledged by both the Georgia P.-T. A. and the Georgia Education association at their recent annual conventions in Columbus.

Through the efforts of the W. C. T. U. the teaching of physiology and hygiene, with special reference to alcoholic drinks and other narcotics and stimulants upon the human system, was made compulsory in all the public schools of the nation. A generation of voters have grown up under this teaching, and their vote has given us national constitutional prohibition. This teaching must continue.

1. To hold and enforce the prohibitory law by teaching the danger in the use of alcohol, even in the small quantity found in beer and wine and home-brewed liquors, including hard cider.

2. To maintain the national standard of efficiency, young people must understand the danger in the use of all stimulants and narcotics, or habit-forming drugs.

3. Recognition from a physiological standpoint must be given to the three-fold nature of the human being physical, intellectual and spiritual.

The scientific temperance essay contests of the W. C. T. U. cause an arrest of thought on this great subject and stimulate the interest of both teachers and pupils. Many hundreds are written in the state each year, but both the state and nation would be greatly helped if all students in the higher grades, high school and colleges would write the essays. Teachers are also invited to write on "The Best Methods of Teaching Temperance."

The subjects and rules for essays may be obtained from the state superintendent of the department of Scientific Temperance Instruction, Miss Clyde Willis, of Greensboro.

W. C. T. U. Joins State Medical Association in Health Campaign.

The state W. C. T. U. was represented at a joint committee meeting of all state organization doing child welfare work by Mrs. Lella A. Dillard, Emory university, State W. C. T. U. president; Mrs. James B. Huff, of Columbus, state superintendent of the Medical Temperance department; Mrs. S. T. Whitttaker, president of the Theresa Griffin W. C. T. U., of Columbus, and Mrs. August Burghard, of Macon, state director of publicity.

The meeting was held in the Ralston hotel in Columbus on April 20, and was called by the department of health and education of the State Medical association, of which Dr. Theo. Toepel, of Atlanta, is chairman. The speakers were Dr. E. C. Thrash, of LaGrange, state president of the Medical association; Dr. W. A. Mulherin, of Augusta; Dr. Abercrombie, Dr. Dorothy Bocker, of Atlanta; the state child hygiene department, and others.

Other organizations represented were Federation of Women's clubs, League of Women Voters and P.-T. A.

A united campaign for better health was the aim of the gathering and will doubtless be the result.

Meeting of Monroe Woman's Club.

Monroe, Ga., May 6.—The Woman's club met Monday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Orrin Roberts. In the absence of the president, Mrs. W. O. D. Bean, Mrs. Lena F. Lewis presided.

Special reports were heard from the several committees.

Delegates to the district meeting, which is to meet in Madison on May 16 and 17, were elected. Mrs. W. H. Nunnally was elected delegate, with Mrs. Clifford Walker, alternate.

Mrs. Lena F. Lewis was elected delegate to the biennial conference which meets in June at Chautauqua, N. Y.

Miss Hester Tichenor then delighted those present with a beautiful piano solo. The literary program which followed was in charge of Mrs. Clifford Walker. Mrs. Walker gave a splendid talk on the bills that are now being legislated or that have been indorsed by the Woman's clubs.

Silver Tea for Missionary Society.

The ladies of the East Point Baptist Missionary society entertained their friends at a beautiful silver tea at the pastorium, Monday afternoon from 3 to 5 o'clock.

The society netted $35, which will be used for the new church building fund.

Try This If You Have Dandruff

There is one sure way that never fails to remove dandruff completely and that is to dissolve it. This destroys it entirely. To do this, just get about four ounces of plain, ordinary liquid arvon; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

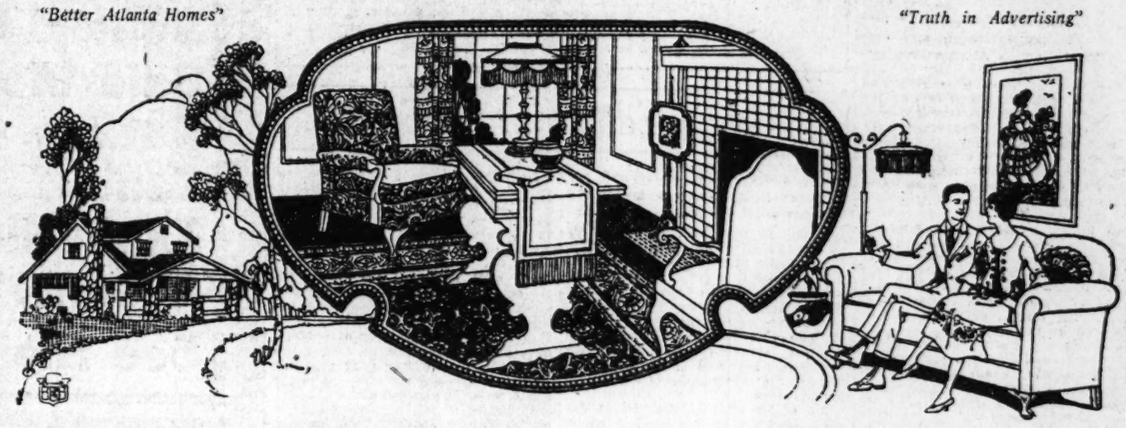

By morning, most if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have.

You will find, too, that all itching and digging of the scalp will stop instantly, and your hair will be fluffy, lustrous, glossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better.

You can get liquid arvon at any drug store. It is inexpensive, and four ounces is all you will need. This simple remedy has never been known to fail.—(adv.)

New Editors in Charge

The newly elected editor and her assistant bring greetings to all the Daughters of the American Revolution, not only of Georgia, but to all of our daughters into whose hands these words of solicitation may fall. We consider it a great honor for the state convention to have given us the editorship of your department, which appears in the Sunday issue of The Constitution, which is our greatest southern daily, and we pledge our best and most earnest efforts in the performance of our duties in this work.

As editor of this department let me remind you of this fact. A chain is no stronger than its weakest link and this chain of our work will be weak or strong, according to your efforts of co-operation. The editorship of the Daughters of the American Revolution is created that the work of the chapters of the state should be brought into contact with all the plans of the different chapters, thereby not only enlarging the scope of our activities but creating circles of new thought which means advancement in our work. This individual effort cannot be accomplished except by a concerted action of every regent in the state. To this end we are asking every regent to appoint a publicity chairman, whose distinct duty is to mail all suitable material for the editor to her just as early as possible. Any news is considered unworthy of place in an up-to-date paper that carries the earmarks of a birthday, showing the age of even seven days. So please have your publicity chairman to speed the material to the editor without any delay.

Co-operation is the greatest note in any organization work. Grant us this, and we promise you our best efforts to promote the interests of this work.

Chapter Reports

Elijah Clarke.

The Elijah Clarke chapter of D. A. R.'s met Thursday afternoon with the regent, Mrs. George Hodgson. After the reading of the reports a communication requesting the observance of Magna Charter day, which is July 15, was read by Mrs. Talmage. The chapter decided to place this day on the program of historical days. Mrs. Hodgson presented Mrs. Talmage an exquisite bauquet of rose carnations in honor of her having been elected first vice regent of Georgia at the state conference, held in Valdosta in April. The gift was made by the chapter.

Under the leadership of our beloved Mrs. Max E. Land, the Georgia Daughters have accomplished great things in the last two years. Eighteen thousand dollars has been given by the Georgia chapters for D. A. R. education in the past year. The representatives, who were sent to Washington, carried the reports showing Georgia to be 100 per cent efficiency in every department.

Sergeant Newton.

This chapter is making plans to mark the famous Hightown Trail, which passes through Newton county. This trail was used by the Indians before the Revolutionary war in seeking trading posts and hunting grounds. 'Tis an interesting and historical fact, that these trails all touched on streams with heavy shoals. Here the Indians would camp and fish then their next stop would be at another waterfall.

Newton county has another well-defined trail known as the Princess Trail and Sergeant Newton wishes to mark this trail in the near future.

Unable to Serve

I wish to say through our official organ that I cannot accept the office of historian for another term. I was not present at the Brunswick convention, was not even in the state of Georgia, and therefore did not have an opportunity of declining at the time. This is my first opportunity of doing so. A re-election was wholly unexpected, since it is contrary to the by-laws of our constitution for an officer to serve more than two years, and my time had expired. However, since I failed to fulfill the duties of the office last year, possibly it was argued that last year "didn't count." But the same conditions prevail now that did then, rendering it impossible for me to give efficient service to the office of state historian.

I thank the D. A. R. most heartily for their willingness to accept me, after having proved so derelict. The work is to my liking, and were circumstances different, nothing would delight me more than searching the highways and byways for secrets of Georgia's past life and history.

MRS. T. M. GREEN.

Chapter Program

The following is the chapter program for December:

1. After America was named, the idea that it was a separate division of the globe was not generally accepted. Some thought it was a great island or a southern continent like Australia, but the majority believed with Columbus. What was his belief?

2. By whom was the real character of America first found out and who sailed through the straits that bear his name?

3. When the eyes of men were opened to the truth, and they saw that America, instead of being a part of the old world, was a new continent, was the discovery hailed with delight?

4. There had been great scarcity of gold in the old world; kings had robbed Jews and had hired pretended chemists to turn lead into gold. From what part of America was gold first obtained, and how was it used?

5. When riches began to pour into the old world from America what effect did it have upon the age?

6. Spain claimed by right of discovery and conquest South America, Mexico, Florida and the larger islands. Who discovered Florida and what did he seek to find of greater value than gold?

7. He obtained a royal charter from Spain to search for that land of promise, and when he found it to hold it as governor for life. When did he reach the mainland of North America and did he discover the fountain?

8. Why did he name it Florida?

9. To whom did the pope give America?

10. What did Francis I., of France, say when he heard this, and what did he do?

11. What American poet has made that region dear to our hearts, and who was the heroine of whom he wrote?

12. What other colony did the French plant and what did they build?

13. With the French settlements in the north, and the Spaniards in possession of Florida, England claimed the vast domain lying between, but it was eighty years before she planted her colonies in America. What name was given to the whole of England's possessions in North America?

14. For whom named?

Arranged by Mrs. J. H. Redding, chairman committee on programs.

Bust of Oglethorpe

My Dear Madam State Editor: I am glad to report to you, and through you, to the Daughters of Georgia who were not present at the state conference, that the vice president general succeeded in obtaining the favorable action of the conference on her resolution "To place the bust of Oglethorpe, founder of Georgia, in the rotunda of Continental Memorial hall." This bust will cost $500, and will be the first permanent memorial to one of Georgia's heroes placed within the walls of our magnificent building, already so rich in offerings from the other states. Very sincerely yours,

MARGARET A. SAGE.
(Mrs. Ira Yale Sage.)

To Live in Washington

The Washington oPst says:

"Mrs. Matthew T. Scott, president general of the Daughters of the American Revolution, has opened elaborate headquarters in the Arlington hotel in Washington. Mrs. Scott has found it difficult to govern the Daughters when she is right on the ground, and utterly impossible at long range. She has, therefore, closed her beautiful home in Bloomington, Ill., and during her term as president general she will call Washington home.

MRS. ROSE M. ASHBY, P. G. M., Director of Publicity.

Grand Chapter 1922

The grand chapter, O. E. S., of Georgia, will meet in the city hall auditorium in Macon Tuesday morning, May 30, and continue through the 31st.

There will be a reception given to the grand officers and past grand matrons and patrons Monday evening at 8 o'clock in the gold room of the Dempsey hotel. There will be a banquet at 9 o'clock, with Rev. Charles Bass, past grand master of Masons, as toastmaster.

All chapters in the state are requested to notify the grand secretary how many of their members desire reservation for the banquet.

Mrs. Winifred McConnell, of Savannah, P. G. M., will call the grand chapter to order on Tuesday morning.

Under the super-leadership of Mrs. Nancy Heard Davis and J. Harry Johnson as its highest officers, the Order of Eastern Star of Georgia has unique and unprecedented progress. The principles of the order, together with the outer work, have been stressed and brought out strongly in all their work. Every member in the state joins in hearty appreciation and co-operation with their work, and wishes for them that their hard year's labor will be culminated in the best, most progressed, harmonious and peaceful grand chapter we have ever had.

Every loyal and earnest worker with the good of the order at heart will lend their full support to make it such.

MRS. ALICE SMITH KNOX,
Of Lexington, Ga., Grand Chaplain, O. E. S.

O. E. S. School.

An instructive and enjoyable school of instruction was held for the twenty chapters in the Atlanta district last Wednesday in the North Atlanta chapter hall. Mrs. Florence Herrington Worthy, matron, and her officers were excellent and hospitable hostesses. Mrs. Ellen Layton and Mrs. Jessie Owens, district deputies, conducted the school. There were fifteen chapters represented. Mrs. Anna Haas read an excellent report of the work done by the relief committee for the Atlanta district. There was beneficial instruction in the ritualistic and jurisprudence work.

The work in the Atlanat district has been carried on most admirably and constructively this year by its two capable deputies.

I received the following interesting items from Mrs. Sallie McElroy, district deputy of the Conyers district:

Conyers district school of instruction was held in Ann Winn chapter, No. 203, in Lawrenceville, April 29. The meeting was opened by district grand deputy, Mrs. Sallie McElroy, with the stations filled by district officers. We had the honor of having with us our grand matron, Mrs. Nancy Heard Davis, who added no little to the interest by her gracious personality in giving desired information. We had quite a number present, and some visitors from other districts. A number of questions were asked and everyone expressed themselves as greatly benefited.

Three candidates were initiated, with Mrs Sallie McElroy presiding and J. H. McLaran, as worthy patron. A most bountiful luncheon was served promptly at 1 o'clock.

Mrs. Davis made an inspiring talk on the beauty of Eastern Star motives and principles. Talks were also made by J. H. McLaran, Mr. Storey, Dr. Kelly and Miss Nora Findley

Mrs. Davis was presented with two lovely pieces of sterling silver by Mrs. Thompson, worthy matron of Ann Winn chapter, 203, from Conyers district, as a token of their love and appreciation of her untiring efforts in their behalf.

Mrs. Sallie McElroy was presented with two lovely pieces of china.

Mrs. McElroy promised if possible to hold another school of instruction before grand chapter at Stone Mountain about the 10th of May.

New Chapters Organized.

On Thursday evening, April 27, Mrs. Julia J. Turner, grand marshal of the state, organized an Eastern Star chapter at Bremen, Ga. Assisting in the work were Mrs. Carrie T. Maxwell, grand warder, acting grand marshal; Mrs. Martha Miller, of Lebanon chapter, Atlanta, acting grand chaplain, and Mrs. Ella L. Head, of Tallapoosa chapter, acting grand secretary.

The elective officers of the new chapter are Mrs. Gailyer Smith, worthy matron; W. A. Duncan, worthy patron; Mrs. Pearl Sullivan, associate matron; Miss Sybyl Shelnutt, conductress, and Miss Gerallon Hamilton, secretary.

After instituting, Mrs. Turner selected a corps of officers from visitors from Tallapoosa, and initiated the worthy patron and the conductress of the new chapter. In the exemplification of the work Algred M. Turner, of Atlanta, was worthy patron.

A detailed lecture of instruction was given, and judging from the zeal of the members this will become one of the best chapters in the state.

Mrs. Warren Lane, district deputy, has organized another chapter in her district at Swainsboro, with a charter membership of 40.

This makes the fourth she has organized this year.

Notes From the Field.

I quote the following interesting excerpt from an authoritative letter received recently:

"I note your question concerning extraneous degrees. You may know that the Amaranth yielded to our request and passed laws at their meeting in Atlantic City, June, 1921, to give up the Eastern Star as the basis of their membership, and appointed a committee to go through their ritual and laws and eliminate the name of the Order of Eastern Star from same. They thereby settled all their differences with us. A letter from their supreme royal patron tells me that they are now growing more rapidly than before, and that about 75 per cent of their new applicants are not members of the Eastern Star. Of course, there being no connection between our two orders, Eastern Star people who wish are at liberty to join the Amaranth. They took the same Masonic basis that the Eastern Star has."

In a letter recently received from Mrs Elizabeth McDaniel, grand matron of South Carolina, she says:

"I feel sure that you will be gratified to know that we have great hopes of having a hospital for crippled children in South Carolina."

Our most worthy grand matron, Mrs. Ella Lines Chapin, of Pine Meadow, Conn., was in Atlanta few hours on April 21. Her father was with her, and they left on the J. K. Orr special train for New Orleans, where they attended the grand encampment. The most worthy will perhaps attend the grand chapter of Georgia.

We take pleasure in presenting in eMadow, Conn., was in Atlanta a few Smith Knox, grand chaplain of the state. She is one of the most capable and loved members in the state, being a charter member of Lexington chapter.

One of the lovliest affairs in the history of the Church of the Incarnation, Episcopal, in West End, was the reception given in honor of the Rev. Cameron Gregg Richardson, by the Woman's guild, on the evening of May 4, in the parish house.

Mr. Richardson recently came to Atlanta from Charleston, to take charge of the parish. The event was greatly enhanced by the presence of Bishop and Mrs. Mikell.

In receiving their guests, the officers of the guild, Mesdames O. N. Dana, Paul Puckett, Mack Evans, Lester Nichols and C. G. Walker were assisted by the senior and junior wardens, Messrs. C. B. Rogers and Nelson Spratt.

The parish house was profusely decorated with hoses.

Stomach Trouble? Are You Nervous?

Why Not Enjoy Perfect Health?

Winston-Salem, N. C.—"I suffered for about eight months with nervous indigestion, and had several doctors to see me, but found no relief until a friend suggested Dr. Pierce's Medicines. I was not able to sleep at night and could not eat, just lived on sweet milk and bread. I began to take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and took one bottle of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, with wonderful relief. I am now past 40, but feel just as I did at 19. I also gave the Discovery to my children, and now I am giving it to my grandchildren.

"You will always find a bottle of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery in my home, and I will recommend it to anyone suffering from nervousness." — Mrs. Isie Rierson, 2415 Hege St.

National Federation Adopts Regional Orchestra Idea

A picture of Miss Nan Bagby Stephens, of Atlanta, is carried by the Musical Digest on the front page of its current issue, and she is called by the Digest, which is one of the most popular and reliable musical publications in the country, "one of the progressive women in music who holds to ideals."

Miss Stephens' work as president of the South Atlantic District Federation of Music clubs, which district has inaugurated the movement now taken up by the national federation for regional orchestras, is the theme of the leading news article in the Digest.

Sixteen regional symphony orchestras is the "big idea" of the federation, this plan to include, one for each district in the National Federation, each to play a regular symphony season of from ten to twenty weeks in the respective districts; each to comprise a full quota of seventy-five to eighty-five players of the highest class obtainable. These men are to be selected, as far as is possible, from Americans living in the respective districts; and it is the desire that each is to have an American-born conductor."

The idea of an interstate or regional symphony orchestra for the South Atlantic district, this idea first exploited in The Constitution, has progressed to the budget stage, with $225,000 as the tentative amount fixed as a first year guarantee, after counsel with orchestra managers of experience as well as conductors.

Cities already approached and professing their willingness to underwrite the first season and thus share in the orchestra's concerts are Jacksonville, Fla., Macon, Ga., Charleston, Greenville, Spartanburg, and Asheville. Asheville, with the meeting of the National Federation there in June 1923 would be the first goal of the orchestra backers, although the permannent idea is uppermost in their minds.

Editorially the Digest says of the orchestra movement:

"What an outlet for young professional musicians—to consider other practicable advantages than those of placing before thousands of people the opportunity of hearing the best kind of music, adequately interpreted. Miss Stephens is one of those women who have both vision and the executive capacity. Aided by Mrs. Lyons, she has gone on to secure what is of first importance to carrying the undertaking to success * * * which is the financial backing. Very soon the outcome of this campaign Miss Stephens is conducting should be made known. In the event that it should go through each of the other fifteen districts of the National Federation will wish to follow suit. It is not possible to secure in this country sixteen more symphony orchestras of the first rank; but that number of admirable orchestras would appear possible. The importance of this movement cannot be overestimated. It deserves the heartiest support —immediately."

Charm of Motherhood

THERE are many homes once childless that now are blessed with healthy, happy childen, because Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound restored the mother to a healthy, normal physical condition.

The following letters give the experience of two young women and prove the value of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in such cases.

Park Rapids, Minn.—"I have taken your medicine—Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound—when I was a girl for pains, and before and after my marriage. I now have a sweet little baby boy, and will send you his picture. My sisters also take your medicine and find it a great help, and I recommend it to those who suffer before their babies are born."—Mrs. Wm. Johnson, Box 155, Park Rapids, Minn.

Kutztown, Pa.—"I wish every woman who wants children would try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It has done so much for me. My baby is almost a year old now and is the picture of health. She walked at eleven months and is trying to use her little tongue. She can say some words real nice. I am sending you her picture. I shall be thankful as long as I live that I found such a wonderful medicine for my troubles."—Mrs. Charles A. Mertz, Kutztown, Pa.

Education the Measure Of Federation's Value.

The individual, the organization which succeeds, is the one with a definite purpose. It takes such a purpose to make an organization coherent. The members must have a common, congenial object to give them the true co-operative spirit that brings organized results, just as the individual with a purpose finds in her every interest in life a bearing on her one great aim, or another incentive to throw all the weight of her thought and ability to the accomplishment of this aim.

And so the Georgia Federation of Women's clubs, through its interest in education has developed that state feeling which takes the individual club or club woman, out of the provincialism of merely local concerns, and gives her a vision that embraces her whole state, and starts her on the way to a national viewpoint. Thus evolved, it is only another step to world consciousness.

The federation's most noteworthy achivements have been along educational lines, as, for instance, their long fight for the admission of women to the state university, and their final success; their propaganda which has been a main impetus towards the present high regard in which most of the state holds the work of home demonstration agents, and most important of all, their establishment and support up to this time of the Talluiah Falls Industrial school, and the Student Aid foundation.

These last are the two movements on which the federation's value to Georgia may best be measured and yet, wise heads of late, among the club women are feeling it necessary to voice a warning.

Is the federation keeping its mind's eyes sufficiently fixed on the definite purpose which has been the greatest incentive to the organized effort of the club women, and has gained for their organization its best recognition?

Official communications recently issued by the federated clubs would suggest that the federation is being dangerously diverted from its strongest cohesive influence. An emergency call from the director of the Tallulah Falls school brings out the fact that the actual pledges from the federated clubs of the state for the maintenance of the school are so far behind as to make it necessary to borrow money to pay the teachers, than whom there are no women more consecrated to their work than those at Tallulah, and that in ten years not a cent has been raised for additions to, or improvements in the plant.

At the same time with the call for Tallulah, went out the statement of the Student Aid foundation that not only has the loan fund been expended up to September next, but according to the number of applications being received every week, the funds now on hand for loans in the fall are only a drop in the bucket.

There are many big, broad things the club women may do, and are doing, but these two are obligations from which there is no escaping.

Club Women Can Raise Made-in-Georgia Standard

"Why do you buy your butter outside of Georgia?" a Georgia woman was asked who must purchase supplies in large quantities for a hotel.

Her answer was significant—"Because I get a better quality of butter, standardized in packing, as well as the cream from which it is made, and at little better price than I could get it at home."

How many times have Georgians had to listen to such an answer as it concerns not only butter, but many other Georgia products, and how long has it not chafed them that it was impossible to contradict this statement of inferiority?

Quality Improved.

Boll weevil conditions have made it necessary for Georgians to turn their attention to diversification of farm products, and with industry growing in these products which were formerly considered merely side lines and "left to the women," there is a greater quantity production, and, because of just such criticism as that of the hotel purchasing agent quoted above, a better quality production. This quality production has been inestimably heightened through the advice and instruction of the demonstration agents, working under the extension department of the College of Agriculture in the case of foods and by the force of competition from outside among the manufacturers of other things than foods.

"Made in Georgia week," May 22 to 29, which was inaugurated by the Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs, and is being pushed along enthusiastically by state agencies, and commercial interests, will have for one of its biggest purposes this calling of the attention of the people of Georgia to those products which need improving.

Should Better Standards.

The Made-in-Georgia campaign, to reach its highest achievement must be made not merely an advertising scheme to sell more Georgia products, but a means of turning the limelight on any deficiencies there may be in the quality of Georgia products and any lack there is in supplying at home such foods or manufactured goods as Georgia may have the equipment to supply.

In other words it will fail in its mission if it becomes merely a paean of praise for what Georgia is and has and does. It will mean nothing unless it is made to mean incentive to bigger and better standards.

Just as the label on manufactured goods, "Made in France," has always stood for fine workmanship and the qualities of beauty and endurance, while "Made in Germany," meant cheapness and shoddiness, so "Made in Georgia" can take one direction or the other.

Georgia women are the buyers. Are they going to be content with "Made in Germany" standards, or will they give their support to such idealism as the manufacturers of France have made a genuine tradition?

Price-Smith, chairman of transportation for the meeting of the Fifth district, Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs, to be held at Tallulah Falls, May 20, announces that she has obtained the following railroad rates, and that everyone interested in going should communicate with her at Hemlock 836 or 30 W. 11th street at once.

Georgia Club Woman Honored in West.

Mrs. Albert E. Thornton, chairman of community service, State Federation of Women's clubs, and president of the Atlanta city federation, during her recent visit in Phoenix, Arizona, addressed four organizations of women in one day, three of these being clubs affiliated with the General Federation of Women's Clubs, and she was assured the support of these clubs for the candidary of Mrs. James E. Hays, for the secretaryship of the General Federation.

Mrs. Thornton, who went to Phoenix as the one woman member of the National Board of Directors, United States Good Roads association, and chairman of the Woman's commission, Bankhead Highway association, both of which bodies convened within the same week at Phoenix, was much distinguished at the two meetings, and was elected to a vice presidency in the former organization.

Her report of woman's work in the interest of good roads embraced a record of their activities in thirty-one states.

"Made in California Week" was completed just before Mrs. Thornton's arrival in California. It was handled by the California Federation of Women's clubs in conformity with the same inspiration from the General Federation, which gave rise to the Made-in-Georgia-Week, the success. The governor of California, in an enthusiastic statement to the newspapers concerning the achievement of the women in this big advertising campaign declared that there scheme and their successful handling of it was of a kind to bring the economic world of California to their feet.

Full Calendar For May.

The calendar for the club women in Georgia is a busy one for the rest of the month, with the following district meetings on the calendar.

Vidalia (twelfth district) May 9, Zebulon (sixth district), May 10, Barnesville (Lamar county federation) May 11, Dalton (Seventh district) May 12, Madison (eighth district) May 16, Tennille (tenth district) May 17-18, Manchester (fourth district) May 25.

Mrs. J. E. Hays, state president, will attend most of these meetings and will go to Kentucky on May 22, for the State Federation convention there, where she will be the guest of honor.

Clubs of Ninth District Entertained at Toccoa

The beauty of Toccoa and the surrounding country is very distracting to a convention visitor there, however full of interest may be the business of the meeting. The Ninth District Federation of Women's Clubs held its annual gathering at Toccoa Thursday night and Friday, and the reports of what the clubwomen are doing and what they propose to do provided an accumulated record which was rather astonishing, even though you might have known beforehand much of this accomplishment in its isolated instances.

But with the duty of informing themselves of Georgia's resources being urged upon the clubwomen as a part of their club work, a few did not deem it a neglect of business to slip away from the meeting for a half hour after a wonderful made in Georgia luncheon, and to enjoy a hurried tour to famous Toccoa falls. The Indians, by the way, gave the name a pronunciation so much more musical than ours—they put the accent on the first syllable—that one wonders why it has been changed.

Beautiful Country.

The short drive is a beautiful one through Maytime woods with the laurel ever growing thicker as one approaches the ravine through which the Tugalo river flows after it has taken its perpendicular fall of 186 feet over rocks that picture the ages. A power plant above the falls now makes the falls scant as a rule, but the heavy rains of late have brought the volume of water to normal, and the beautiful Toccoa, the highest waterfalls east of the Rockies (even Niagara, although it is wider, is twenty feet or so less high) is wonderfully impressive. The mist of the falling water seen through the fresh spring green of the trees as one comes nearer makes the heart beat faster with the loveliness of it, and then standing in the midst of ferns and blooming laurel near the foot of the falls, with the spray blowing in one's face, and one's eyes filled with the glory of the rainbow from the sifting sunlight on the misty waters, one is obliged to feel that it is indeed "great to be a Georgian."

The district convention was entertained by the three federetad clubs of Toccoa—the Literary club (which happens to be the second oldest federated club in Georgia), Mrs. Edwards, president; the Woman's club, Mrs. W. E. Thornley, president, and the Parent-Teacher association, Mrs. Edmund Wroe, president. The Toccoa clubwomen have their own clubhouse, a most attractive building right in town, which they built through their own efforts on ground loaned them by Dr. Jeff Davis. The convention luncheon, a delightful affair, when the whole menu was Georgia made, was held there, but on account of the size of the convention gathering, the meetings took place at the Baptist church.

Mrs. Hubert Yow, of Martin, Ga., presided in the absence of Mrs. M. F. Nelms, district president, and frequent and tender reference was made to Mrs. Nelms, for whom the greatest sympathy was expressed on account of the recent loss of her husband and brother, and her own present illness.

State officers in attendance were the president, Mrs. J. E. Hays, of Montezuma, whose arrival was made the occasion of quite an ovation; Mrs. A. P. Brantley, of Blackshear, first vice president, and Mrs. Alonzo Richardson, who represented both the state and general federation, of which latter organization she is division chairman. State chairmen who were honor guests were Mrs. Newton C. Wing, chairman for Georgia-made goods and products, and Mrs. Ira E. Farmer, of Thomson, chairman for a home demonstration agent in every county. The state federation editor was also in attendance.

M. L. Brittain, state school superintendent, was a distinguished visitor, and J. F. Carter, of Gainesville, representing the Georgia Good Roads association, had places on the afternoon program.

President's Address.

The address of the state president, Mrs. J. E. Hays, which was delivered at the opening meeting in the evening, and was largely attended by men as well as women, was a clear and impressive exposition of club work, its nature and extent, its meaning to the individual community and to the state as a whole.

The biggest thing the Georgia Federation has done this year, declared Mrs. Hays, was its going with all its clubs into the general federation, thus carrying the message of what Georgia is doing into the great arena of progress represented by the work of this international body of women, and to bring back to Georgia the message that comes of such contact and exchanges of thought and plan.

She emphasized the work and the possibilities of the Tallulah Falls Industrial school, and of the student aid foundation, which now has thirty-five girls in college, has applications from 95 now on hand, and has educated 208.

She noted the facility of the federation's work in organization, which in three months time has organized committees on jails in 100 counties in conjunction with the work of the state welfare board. She emphasized the accomplishment of the club women in child welfare, markets, the promotion of tourist camps, libraries, citizenship, health, promotion of Georgia resources, fine arts, community service, good roads, etc.

The theory of club work she lauded in its value as an outlet for the surplus energies of busy women and its opportunities for their self-development as well as its meaning to the educational, civic and welfare interests of the state. She spoke of the growing appreciation by Georgia men of the work of the women, and the increasing willingness of men and women to merge their work and strengthen it by this co-operation. Mr. Brittain's address, which followed, on "Why I Like Women's Clubs," was a most happy sequence, in which he lauded their ability for sacrifice, their faith, their patriotism, and their growth in the qualities, which are called practical.

DEPARTMENT REPORTS.

The new system of approved routine for district conventions, which limits reports to those of department and division chairmen, thus including in a general way the work of the individual clubs, which is so voluminous as to make it impossible for a hearing of reports from them all in the short time allotted the convention, provides a very excellent general outline of federation activity, and gives all the clubs the benefit of the suggestion contained in the outstanding work being done in any one community without the probable duplication of suggestion if all clubs gave detailed reports.

Club Libraries.

Outstanding work of the district thus epitomized and outstanding events of the convention, which must in this report be touched upon lightly on account of lack of time (they will be emphasized in later numbers of the club page) might start with the library extension report by Mrs. J. E. McElroy, of Norcross, which Mrs. Hays, at its conclusion, called the best district report she had ever heard.

The summary of the report is as follows:

Number of clubs owning libraries, 6; number of library buildings owned by clubs, 1; number of clubs contributing books to school libraries, 10; number of new books added to club libraries, 1,081; number of books owned by clubs, 4,042; money made, donated and value of books contributed, $1,484.81; on hand in United States bonds at 4 per cent, $800.

An amusing interpolation was made by Mrs. McElroy in a description of the library service of the club in one town, which is furnishing to the town a free public library with a professional librarian. The town authorties have "consented" to furnish the electric lighting free, this, Mrs. McElroy explained being the first "breach" the club has made in the municipality's inactivity about library support.

Detail of the library report will be published later.

Legislation.

Mrs. C. E. Pittman, of Commerce, chairman of legislation, after reciting the bills which the federated clubs have pledged themselves to support, urged that they remember the difference between indorsement and approval; that they should not indorse unless they mean to work for a bill, and that when they have indorsed it they must not neglect the consequent obligation of actual work for its passage.

Following Mrs. Pittman's report, Mrs. M. L. Duggan, of Clayton, asked the support of the club women for a bill which will provide for the rotation of judges in order to increase their responsibility, making them answerable to state as well as community, and her plan was later followed by the passage of a resolution that the district would work for such a bill.

Indorsement was also given to the proposed legislation by which county school superintendents may be appointed instead of elected. This movement started at the state education convention in Columbus.

History of the Ninth.

Mrs. W. W. Stark, of Commerce, chairman of press and publicity, who is one of the most active and successful chairmen in the state, made a splendid report on publicity by giving a remarkable showing of the space extended the news of the Ninth district activities by the newspapers of the district and the official club page in The Constitution, and signalized her year's work by presenting to the district a history of club work in the Ninth district, which she had herself compiled.

The history goes back to the formation of the federation, as it was inspired by Mrs. Hugh Willet in 1911, and gives in text and photographs the outstanding work and leaders of the district and up to the present time. A handy volume, it is so arranged that it can be continued indefinitely and will be invaluable for practical reference as well as the inspiration that comes of knowledge of work already well done; a real power, in other words, for the future.

The history is the first compiled by any district in Georgia, and Mrs. Stark was given cordial congratulations and thanks. Mrs. Hays announced that she would carry its message to every other district and urge a similar work in every part of the state.

Prizes Awarded.

Mrs. Stark also announced the winners of the two prizes she had offered the district, the first for the best club history and the other for the best publicity report. They went to the Norcross and the Lawrenceville clubs and took the form of the handsome cook book recently published by the Atlanta Woman's club.

Forestry.

That every county have a forest warden was a proposal following upon the report of Mrs. A. L. Frick, of Macon on natural resources which received the convention's approval, and will be turned over as a suggestion to the state forestry committee with which body, soon to be converted into a state association, the club women have voted their co-operation.

Home Economics.

That six hundred hats have been made by the women of one county since January and four hundred in another as a part of their home economic work, was a striking detail in the excellent report of Mrs. C. A. Mize district demonstration agent, with whom the club women are working in close harmony. In the same time one hundred and thirty-seven girls in the community clubs have made their own hats. Everything in the way of house work from making hats to raising chickens, and the planting of thrift gardens was included in Mrs. Mize's report which covered every town which has a federated club and some which have not.

Fine Arts.

Mrs. Ned Pendergrast of Jefferson, district chairman of fine arts, made a stimulating plea for music. She urged that the women put music into the homes, encourage children to love it in the home. She emphasized the General Federation's motto in music, "To make popular music, good and good music popular," She urged the standardization of teaching, which would imply examinations for music teachers; she asked for live music departments in the county schools and credits for it. "Sing Christmas Carols if you want to keep young," added Mrs. Pendergrast, "and take your singing to the old people in your homes."

"It doesn't cost anything to sing," she said: "Even economic depression need not keep us from singing. It will give us heart, inspire us to renewed energy and a love for the finer things of life. And when we sing, let us sing intelligently."

An excellent report was made on community service by Mrs. W. C. Edwards, of Toccoa, and Mrs. W. B. Rice, of Commerce, in her report on the department of public welfare showed a vast amount of fine work being done.

Resolutions.

Important resolutions passed by the Ninth District Federation were as follows: A resolution called for support of the Made-in-Georgia week being promoted by the Georgia federation with emphasis on eating, wearing and using only Georgia products and Georgia-made goods.

A resolution indorsed a bill which will provide for the rotation of judges; an enabling act that counties may make appropriations for the maintenance of county agents, and a bill providing for the appointment rather than the election of county school superintendents.

A resolution condemned and called for the protest of clubwomen against motion picture films of a character detrimental to the mental and moral health of youth.

A resolution indorsed the candidacy of Mrs. J. E. Hays, state president, for the office of recording secretary of the general federation, and volunteer talks were made from the floor urging that the district clubs back up their indorsement by sending to the biennial a full complement of delegates to support Mrs. Hays' campaign.

Made-in-Georgia Week.

"How many people in this audience of ninth district people know what are the agricultural resources and the manufactured products of your own district? How many of the Toccoa people know the resources of Toccoa?"

The questions were asked by Mrs. Newton C. Wing, chairman of "Made-in-Georgia week" for the Georgia Federation, and not a hand was raised.

"Now that is one of the big reasons for this educational campaign—that Georgia people may be informed of what they have; what they produce at home," said Mrs. Wing. "Education is its main purpose, for the federation will not be satisfied with one week of buying at home, but they expect Made-in-Georgia week to become a permanent, all-the-year-around habit."

Such was Mrs. Wing's introduction of an address on the State Federation's campaign for a Made-in-Georgia week, which, she explained, is receiving the co-operation of every organization in the state which is working for the advertisement and the promotion of Georgia-made resources and Georgia-made goods.

"Plant in faith, reap in hope, and market by accident" will no longer hold good, she said, quoting from a recent statement by Harvie Jordan. "The old economic order is broken down. The boll weevil did it, and it is the purpose of the federated clubs to bring together all the forces working for Georgia, correlate their efforts, and extend them through this co-operation."

She cited some of the most remarkable of Georgia's advantages in resources of soil, climate, water supply and people, and urged a better knowledge of them and use of them.

She asked that Toccoa and the Ninth district enter into the state-wide movement for the Made-in-Georgia week, with a dinner as a climax devoted to Georgia foods and Georgia-made products, and cited for suggestion as to procedure there, the campaigns which have already been undertaken in Waycross, Moultrie and other Georgia cities.

So convincing was her exposition of the movement that she was not only given the hearty promise of the club women's support, but business interests of Toccoa invited Mrs. Wing to return at a later date to lay before them a complete program of campaign in time for the Made-in-Georgia week, May 22-29.

Tallulah School.

In the absence of Mrs. Hugh Willet, director for Tallulah Falls school, Mrs. Alonzo Richardson made a strong plea for adequate maintenance by the club women of this schol which is the federation's property and obligation. She stated its high rating, both as a federation activity and as an educational power, and handled her subject both from the standpoint of sentiment and practical usefulness.

With pressure of business crowding out her address on "Citizenship," of which the Ninth district, she stated, has a most active chairman. Mrs. Richardson urged upon the club women that they should register and stimulate universal interest in registration, and in the first obligation of citizenship, the use of the ballot.

Home Demonstration.

Mrs. Ira E. Farmer, limited in time to five minutes, devoted this brief space to urging the district's aid in having passed the necessary enabling act by which the counties may appropriate funds for the support of home demonstration agents.

The value of the home economics agents to Georgia she cited forcibly by one instance; namely, that with county agents in only one hundred of Georgia's one hundred and sixty counties the value of the fresh vegetables canned and sold by canning club girls in Georgia was greater than the entire amount of the appropriation provided last summer by the legislature of Georgia for the maintenance of the home demonstration agents who have taught these girls what they know.

"I have only time, said Mrs. Farmer, "to urge that you talk, and talk continually, demonstration work."

Value of Organization.

That the entire woman power of Georgia must be organized in order to put over the work for Georgia that faces the federation as its obligation, was the theme of the short address by Mrs. Brantley, first vice president and chairman of organization.

There is no feature of woman's work, moral, educational or civic, that is not embodied in the program of the federation, said Mrs. Brantley. "Think how much talent there is among the women of the state, and try to realize how much time and effort is being lost while this talent is not organized and then go out and organize it. Each district vice president, for she is the district chairman of organization, should see that her district is not crippled by the lost motion in capable women not brought into the organized effort of women.

Election of Officers.

A closing event of the convention was the election of district officers as follows: Mrs. Hubert Yow, of Martin, president; Mrs. J. E. McElroy, of Norcross, first vice president; Mrs. W. C. Edwards, of Toccoa, second vice president; Miss Claire Anderson, of Commerce, secretary; Mrs. D. M. Snelson, of Toccoa, treasurer.

The place of the next meeting will be decided by the executive board.

A pretty compliment to the state president was the presentation to Mrs. Hays from the district of her expenses for the trip to Toccoa.

Mrs. Hubert Yow, elected president of the district to succeed Mrs. Nelms, was elected a delegate from the district to the biennial of the General Federation of Women's Clubs at Chautauqua, N. Y., in June. Her credentials will have to come from a district club, but the district desired that the compliment should come from all the clubs.

Toccoa's Hospitality.

The hospitality of Toccoa was for the convention visitors a most memorable and happy experience, both as it was expressed in the Toccoa homes and in the convention luncheon.

Of the homes which extended their hospitality to the clubwomen, one of the most beautiful is that of Dr. and Mrs. Jeff Davis, this a colonial mansion of the truest architecture, which crowns an eminence on an estate of 2,700 acres, of which 1,100 is farming land under cultivation. The beauty of the home, the flowers in its formal and old-fashioned gardens, the material good things that come out of the soil, its outlook on the "Whispering Pines" which gives the place its name, and above all, the graciousness and generosity and happiness of its hospitality are an epitome of Georgia at its best, which was the only side of the convention the visitors saw of Toccoa.

Austell Boosts Georgia Week.

Mrs. D. H. Goodwin, Austell, seventh district, district chairman for "Made in Georgia" week, is making plans for an active campaign along this line. It has been suggested that the state chairman ask Georgia manufacturers to let each club have a per capita supply of their wares at wholesale to be sold to the 40,000 club members on commission, thus augumenting club funds and giving Georgia women a chance to learn what is made within the state. A combination catalog would not be a bad idea.

COME TO THE BIENNIAL.

It is an interesting fact that the first conditions of efficiency in work together are friendliness and trust. This is true even of such big things as government and national life. It is also true of organizations. The biennial in Chautauqua this June is more than a meeting. It is a revelation to and of us of the fine human qualities and the devoted spirit of the whole and energy of the rest of us. I speak warmly because I could wish that every clubwoman could share with me the understandings of the character of our club companions, east and west and south and north that it has been my privilege to see as I went about. The biennial is a fine concentrated sample of it. I hope as many as possible are going to be there and get that re-created faith in the power of good womanhood, the belief that effort is worth while, and the wisdom to do our tasks better than before that such a coming together brings.

ALICE AMES WINTER.

State College Helps Federation In Campaign

Miss Mary E. Creswell, director of the division of home economics, State College of Agriculture, who is working in close harmony with the campaign of the Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs for Made-in-Georgia week, under the chairmanship of Mrs. Newton C. Wing, has sent the following communication to all home demonstration workers in Georgia, including the county and district workers, and these workers are enthusiastically supporting the clubwomen:

"The Georgia products department, Georgia State Federation of Women's Clubs, Mrs. Newton C. Wing, of Atlanta, Ga., chairman, fully appreciates the importance of the agricultural products of Georgia and of the place the home demonstration agents have in stimulating production, standardization of products and distribution. Mrs. Wing's committees will co-operate with local forces all over Georgia in holding a 'Made-in-Georgia week' May 22-27. During this week there will be a splendid opportunity for you to have, along with the other exhibits of that week, an exhibit of Girls' club products, including fresh vegetables and special products. This may be a favorable time for securing orders for such special products as preserves, soup mixtures, jams, catsups, etc.

"At the close of the 'Made-in-Georgia week,' there will be Georgia dinners given in all of the towns of Georgia. These dinners will be under the auspices of Mrs. Wing's local chairmen co-operating with the chambers of commerce, other organizations and with the home demonstration agents wherever they are located. The home economics division here will help you by making suggestions as to menus and furnishing some attractive recipes. We would like to see our agents and the girls take a prominent part in the serving of these dinners because of the fine opportunity they will give for bringing the girls' work before the prominent people of the communities and also because one-half of the net proceeds of these dinners is to go toward founding a gift scholarship fund for training in home economics for Canning Club girls who have excellent records and have graduated from accredited high schools. Such scholarships are to be used during the freshman year at the Georgia State College of Agriculture. You can readily see that this plan will have a far-reaching influence in the development of leaders in home economics."

IMPORTANT NOTICE TO FEDERATED CLUBS

A few days of grace have been extended the Georgia clubs, which have not yet fulfilled the necessary requirements for membership in the General Federation.

Plainly these requirements are: Dues to Mrs. Robert T. Daniel, state treasurer, and constitution and by-laws, and names of officers to the General Federation director, Mrs. Samuel M. Inman.

The Georgia federation has indorsed the candidacy for office in the General Federation of their state president. Endorsement implies active support. Unless they send at once their ten cents per capita dues for General Federation membership, they are leaving their candidate without backing, as well as keeping Georgia off the honor roll of state federations in good standing.

There is no choice in the matter of going into the General Federation. Per capita paying clubs in the state federation are, through the action of their delegates to the state convention last fall, automatically members of the General Federation.

Five delegates from every club in the district are invited and expected to attend, as well as all chairmen of the district and state and all officials.

Beginning Tomorrow

CONGOLEUM WEEK

Big Bargains in America's Most Popular Floor-Covering

TOMORROW, Monday morning, begins one of the greatest floor-covering events in the city's history—a six-day sale of the nationally-advertised, guaranteed GOLD-SEAL Congoleum.

All the stores named below, and many others throughout the city, have joined together and, by special arrangement with the manufacturer, offer genuine GOLD-SEAL Congoleum Art-Rugs, Rug Borders, and GOLD-SEAL Congoleum By-the-Yard at lower prices than these popular floor-coverings have been sold in years.

Record Low Prices for This Week Only

Don't forget that these special bargain prices are for this week only. After next Saturday, regular prices will again be in force.

If you already know the wonderful qualities of GOLD-SEAL Congoleum, you will need no urging to take advantage of these bargain prices. If you have never had Congoleum in your home—don't miss this great opportunity to prove to yourself, at little expense, the many advantages of these beautiful, sanitary floor-coverings.

GOLD-SEAL Congoleum is the modern printed floor-covering. It possesses many unique advantages.

Beautiful Patterns—The patterns, both in variety of color and design, are the most artistic you can possibly imagine. There are charming colorings for all the rooms of the house—neat tile and wood-block designs for kitchen and bathroom; more fanciful ones for bedrooms, dining-room and living-room.

Sanitary, Easy to Clean—Dust and dirt—even spilled grease and liquids—cannot penetrate the smooth surface of Congoleum. A few swishes of a damp mop clean the surface in a twinkling—the pretty colors gleaming like new. It is the most sanitary floor-covering imaginable.

No Fastening Needed—Curling edges and turned-up corners are disadvantages unknown to GOLD-SEAL Art-Rugs. They actually "hug the floor." No fastening is ever needed.

Economical—The prices speak for themselves. At regular prices, GOLD-SEAL Congoleum is unusually economical. At the special prices quoted above it is a tremendous bargain.

Satisfaction Guaranteed—To be able to purchase attractive, durable rugs for every room at these prices is satisfaction indeed. But to buy rugs that are also absolutely guaranteed to satisfy seems almost too good to be true. And you do just that when you buy the popular GOLD-SEAL Congoleum Art-Rugs and Floor-Coverings.

For City Home or Summer Bungalow

GOLD-SEAL Congoleum Art-Rugs are so bright and cheerful; so easy to keep clean; so durable, and—above all—so inexpensive, that they are just as suitable for the summer cottage as for the city residence. They're ideal for porches, too, for they're rain-proof and sun-proof and don't have to be tacked down.

STOCK MOVEMENTS JUSTIFY LARGE MEASURE OF CONFIDENCE

Rumor That New York Bankers Are Maintaining Market Not Supported

BY WALTEH B. BROWN,
Editor New York Commercial. Written for The Atlanta Cnostitution.

New York, May 6.—If some quarters it is held that the strength in the stock market is to some degree fictitious in that it is being maintained by important banking interests for the purpose of supporting a strong market for bonds in order that many new flotations which have been held in abeyance for some time may be disposed of. The theory is that any sharp reaction would scare the public away now that it has been induced to come back into the market by the development of better business conditions.

While there may be something in this theory, it is hardly safe to assume that the banking interests of Wall street, however powerful they may be, are strong enough to maintain a million share days continuously for a month or more, or that they can support such a market if it should be inherently weak. About the most that can be done is to counteract bear raids, which might have the effect of shaking confidence by precipitating an unwarranted break in prices. These interests may consider it advisable to protect the market, which is slightly different from supporting it.

The history of the market during the past month justifies a large measure of confidence. Spectacular fluctuations have been few and have been limited in the number of issues affected. The upward movement has been orderly, and reactions, when they have occurred, have not affected the entire list, but have been confind to particular groups and sometimes only to particular stocks. It has been noticeable that those who have sold out at the high point have been quick to reinstate after only moderate declines.

True Reflection.

Except for a few of the highly speculative issues there have been no convulsive movements or prices and altogether it has been a market reflecting the return of confidence to the business community. This, in turn, has inspired confidence on the part of those who have been more conservative than others until there is no denying that business is getting a very good start.

Revival of the steel industry has, of course, been the most noteworthy, but only less spectacular has been the comeback of the automobile industry. When the automobile shows were held shortly after the turn of the year pessimism was of the deep-dyed variety.

Advises Advance.

The president of one of the moderate-priced motor car companies in conversation with the writer stated that if the automobile concerns would stop cutting prices and make an advance of $100 in the price of a car would do more to stimulate business than anything else. There were any number of reasons why this particular company could not take the lead, but it was only a month or so afterward that one of the well-known cars announced an advance of $100 on one of its models and thereafter no further price cuts were announced by any of the makers. Sure enough, the demand for pleasure cars began to improve, and while the particular action may not have been responsible for the increase in the demand of such proportions as have since been attained it evidently did put an end to cut-throat competition.

Demand Too Great.

At any rate, business has jumped ahead so fast that the month of April was the second largest monh in the history of Detroit, which is the center of the industry in America. The unexpectedness of this recovery is shown by the fact that the makers of parts and bodies have been unable to keep up with the demands made upon them by the automobile makers, and although running to capacity there may be a shortage if the present rate of demand continues much longer.

Another important point in industrial recovery is the largely increased demand for rolling stock for the railroad companies. The number of freight cars ordered during the first four months of 1922 approximated 60,000, or twice as many for the entire twelve months of 1921.

Must Replace Equipment.

This demand parallels 1916, when the number was increased to such an extent that the total for the year exceeded 200,000. That number of cars will be needed to replace worn out equipment unless they fall back upon cars that are not really fit for service. Even working to capacity it would take several years to turn out the number of freight cars needed to bring the roads up to that standard of efficiency which existed in pre-war days, taking into account the natural growth of the interval.

Michigan is the only state in the Union having a woman in the upper house of its legislature.

Short Cotton Crop Reports Boosts Prices

New York, May 6.—The fear of another short or companatively small crop of cotton was increased by the reports of heavy rains and further floods reaching here from the south during the earlier part of the past week. As a result a general buying movement developed in the cotton market, with evidences of increased trade demand as well as a broadening of Wall street, western and other commission house interests.

Before there was any reaction of consequence July contracts had sold up to 19.21c and October to 19.30c, making advances of about 160 to 170 points from the low level of late the previous week and of between 2 1-4 and 3 cents per pound as compared with the low prices of last March.

Realizing Active.

Realizing became active at higher figures, while there was also scattered southern selling, leading to reactions of 50 or 60 points from the best, and the disposition to take profits was increased by late prospects for improving weather.

Reports received here from the south have complained of further delay in farm work as a result of excessive rainfall, and it is stated that with a good season in the ground much of the delay or damage can be made up with good weather now on, but the week's news has led to greater fear of insect damage this summer and there has been a disposition to scale down estimates of the probable acreage.

Acreage Estimates.

Acreage estimates based on mid-April reports from the south ranged up to an increase of 19 per cent, but reports more recently issued have placed the probable gain over last year at from 2.6 to a little over 10 per cent, and final figures are expected to depend to some extent on weather conditions during the balance of this month. The increased activity and big advance in raw cotton has been followed by reports of larger business in cotton goods at advancing prices, and Fall River sales for the week were estimated at 250,000 pieces.

An improved business has also been reported in Manchester and there have been larger spot sales in the leading southern markets. Figures published by the department of commerce estimate world's consumption of American cotton for this season at about 13,000,000 bales with a carry over of only 4,291,000 at the end of July contemplated compared with 9,351,000 last year.

WASHINGTON WORK WILL START HOUR EARLIER MAY 15

BOND MARKET SHOWS STRENGTH

New York, May 6.—Firmness, which later developed into pronounced strength, accompanied today's broad dealings in the bond market. Liberties were active and made moderate recoveries from recent lower levels.

There was little alteration in foreign war issues, but Danish municipal eights "A" and "B" gained 2 1-2 and 2 points, respectively, Chinese Railway 5s also rising two points.

Railroad bonds were mainly better, especially issues of the Atchison, Southern Pacific and Seaboard Air Line systems.

Trading in local tractions was quieter, but mostly at additional gains, Brooklyn Rapid Transit sevens and allied certificates rising 1 to 1 1-4 points, with New York Railway 5s. Total sales, par value, $8,661,000.

Next week's underwritings will include $75,000,000 of federal farm loan 4 1-2 per cent bonds, to be offered by the twelve federal reserve banks on Monday at par and interest.

Treasury officials emphasize the fact that this is the first issue of these bonds at 4 1-2 per cent in almost three years.

They add that the present satisfactory state of the investment market "should assure their prompt absorption."

COTTON DAMAGED BY HEAVY RAINS

Damage to the cotton crop of Georgia from the recent excessive rains and cold weather will aggregate several million dollars, it was stated Saturday by J. J. Brown, commissioner of agriculture, who obtained reports from various sections of the state last week.

"Not only has the heavy rainfall retarded the growth of the cotton crop," asserted Mr. Brown, "but the unusually cold days of late spring has played havoc with the young plants. This is especially true of the cotton crop in the middle section of the state. A large acreage where the young cotton plants were from two to six inches above the ground has been totally ruined necessitating a crop of corn, beans or peas as a substitute crop if this land is to be replanted.

"Other sections of the state have also suffered from the washouts and bad weather. Reports from the northwestern and central western sections indicate that the cotton crop has suffered tremendously."

VIRGINIA T. P. A. ELECTS OFFICERS

Danville, Va., May 6.—Roy J. Charles, of Newport News, was elected president of the Virginia division of the Travelers' Protective association at the closing session today of the annual convention. B. H. Randolph, Richmond, was elected first vice president; J. L. Pleasants, Lynchburg, second vice president, and H. L. Harwood, Richmond, secretary-treasurer.

The convention voted down the proposed change for classified membership and indorsed the state road bond issue.

G., F. & A. WOULD ABANDON BOAT LINE

Washington, May 6.—The Georgia, Florida and Alabama railroad asked the interstate commerce commission today for permission to abandon service on its boat line between Carrabelle and Apalachicola, Fla., a distance of thirty-two miles. The water transportation on this route, maintained in addition to its rail line, the railroad complaint said, had failed to pay expenses for several years.

Gasoline is produced by "cracking" heavier oils. The Burton process for this production yielded in 1921 a daily average of some 2,000,000 gallons.

Will Stocks Break in May?

You are probably guessing when stocks will be top and will get caught in a break this month and lose money.

When you buy or sell stocks you need to know two things—WHAT to buy or sell and WHEN. The SUPPLY AND DEMAND LETTER tells you just what you need to know. It is based on mathematical science and Supply and Demand, which enables me to know when stocks are top or bottom.

Recently I advised the purchase of Mex. Pete around 115 to hold for 135. It made good, as well as many other active leaders of which I have advised purchases. Have had all the big moves in Cotton and Wheat.

My 1922 Forecast, issued last December, called for a big Bull market this Spring, and my subscribers have made large profits. It gives the trend of stocks for the balance of 1922 with major and minor tops and bottoms. With it you can plan your trades months ahead. Price reduced to $60.00.

Next Tuesday's letter will contain valuable information on special stocks. Don't miss it! Send $15.00 for one month's Subscription and be convinced of its value.

My record for accuracy will stand investigation. Recent letters, 1921 Forecast, testimonials from subscribers and newspaper comments on my accuracy mailed free.

CONCILIARY RECEIVER NAMED FOR COMPANY

Savannah, Ga., May 6.—(Special.) C. R. Isaac, Brunswick, today was appointed by Federal Judge Beverly D. Evans, ancillary receiver for the physical property of the American Shipbuilding company, at Brunswick, this property being valued at approximately $125,000.

The action followed representation of the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet corporation, which avers that it has claims against the Brunswick company for $469,000. The receiver in New York is alleged to have taken no steps to take over the property. The ancillary receiver was therefore named.

FURTHER SLIGHT LOSSES IN GRAIN

Chicago, May 6.—Stop loss orders were uncovered in May wheat on the board of trade today and prices were carried off sharply. The deferred deliveries being affected by the May. At the finish wheat ranged from unchanged to 3 1-4 cents lower with May $1.36 1-2 to $1.36 3-4 and July $1.23 3-4 to 3-8 cents down. Provisions ranged from unchanged to 5 cents lower.

Wheat was heavy in tone. There was liquidation on, and some pressure came from commission houses. The May broke to a new low on the present decline, the inside figure shortly after the opening being 9 cents under the high point of the week. Trade in this delivery was light and prices were easily influenced.

The deferred deliveries were weaker in sympathy with May, but the bulk of the trade was of a local character. Crop reports generally from the winter wheat territory ae showing improvement, although a period of dry and warm weather would be beneficial. Deliveries on May contracts this week aggregated 2,291,000 bushels of wheat.

Corn and oats held within relatively narrow limits with oats showing stubborn resistance to pressure, while corn ceased off fractionally. Sentiment is somewhat lss bullish on con. Fild work is progressing rapidly with scattered reports of planting coming from Illinois and Missouri and with favorable weather country offerings to arrive are expected to show considerable increase by the close of next week.

Provisions were dull and prices held close to the previous day's finish.

OIL'S LOSSES NEUTRALIZED BY GAINS IN OTHER STOCKS

Independent Steels, New Haven and Atlantic Gulf Among Those Advancing

BY C. H. PLATT,
Constitution's New York Financial Correspondent.

New York, May 6.—(Special.)—Losses on the New York exchange caused by selling of oils, particularly Mexican Petroleum and some of the less important domestic issues, at declines of 1 to 3 points, were neutralized by gains of the same extent in a number of industrials, especially independent steels and several utilities. New Haven registered a new high for the year, but the other rails were not so active.

The closing was strong, however, and total sales registered approximately 600,000 shares. Independent steels, Atlantic Gulf, Famous Players, Postum Cereal and Kayser common and preferred partly offset the decline in most other issues by recording net gains of 1 to 4 points. Food specialties, shippings, tobaccos and miscellaneous issues followed the drop in oils.

The return of active pool support and buying for important account, also a renewal of public demand for stocks, brought about many new highs during the last week. This was especially true in the oil stocks as a whole, some of which had sharp advances, also in the steels, rubber shares, shipping stocks and the railroad equipment shares.

In some places there was a reactionary trend, but this was more than offset by the especial strength in others. It can be said that in many ways it is apparent that a new bull market has started and that the reactions of the previous week were just a "resting place."

The action at times was dull in many parts of the list at times when there was very brisk trading in some special groups. The rails tended to lag behind during the early part of the week, but picked up again later and at times were quite strong. The various changes in the situation at Genoa were carefully watched by the market, but it has been apparent for some time that outside influences are secondary in stocks to the technical position, and that when reactions are due, they would come in the face of the best news, and that when the technical position is strengthened, the market would advance in the face of such bad news as has developed of late.

Ruling Principals.

Anything drastic in the way of unfavorable news might be a decided factor, but the lesser developments have been ignored. The coal strike and the soldier bonus have been given their periods of attention, but both of them also seem to be negligible factors at the present time. The two things that the market is the most concerned about are money conditions and general business, and both are a cause for bullish feeling on stocks at the present time.

During last month, a considerable short interest has come into the market, ignoring the fact that the general trend is upward and paying attention only to the consideration that there ought to be extensive declines after so many weeks of advances. Many signs that this short interest is in a bad position in many stocks have been disclosed during the week, and some sharp advances in a few issues are looked for at any time that short covering may be forced in them.

"Sold Out Bulls."

The market also is full of "sold out bulls." People who took their profits and then waited for larger reaction to appear than actually developed, honing to buy back cheaper, only to find in many cases that the stocks they sold were advancing instead of declining further. It is usual for such traders when they have missed their market to be drawn in again on material advances.

The pools and important operators have also been working for a renewal of heavy public buying, with every prospect that this will be seen again fairly soon.

It is evident that while a considerable amount of distribution of concentrated holdings took place on the very strong and active markets last month, that much of this stock was replaced on the first moderate reactions and that, in a general way, stocks are again very strongly held. Many outside buyers who have good profits are not inclined to take them, having gone into the market with a view of holding for a long pull and large profits.

Loan Arrangements.

Instances are related of men who have not borrowed from brokers on margin but have gone to their own banks and have arranged time loans at low rates for a period of months, intending to hold their stocks for the expected big speculative markets of the fall. Investors have cleared the market in many of the dividend stocks of the highest grade, and the only thing that prevents some of these from having very big advances, in view of the greatly reduced floating supply, is that yields are not so attractive on many of them, a result of their previous advances, that many investors have been turning to other issues giving a better return.

The financial and business structures are showing increasing strength all of the time, furnishing a more solid background to the stock market than was the case when such conditions were merely in prospect and seemed very slow in being turned into actualities.

Seeking Employment.

Of more importance to the strength of the market than anything else at the moment is the continuous influx of funds seeking employment. The better business conditions and the rising stock market have released enormous sums that had been tied up in one way or another. It is normal for speculative activity in stocks to increase when money is plentiful at low rates, and there is little danger of any material ticktening in the money market for many months to come.

Time funds remain low, although call money advanced moderately for the first of the month needs, then eased. About the only strain on the money market that is in sight might arise if there were a continuation of the heavy flotations of new securities that have been witnessed in recent weeks. Each offering is promptly oversubscribed, however, so that it is apparent that the saturation point has not been approached yet.

Increased Demand.

The oil industry is reporting a tremendous increase in the demand for gasoline, which is another result of the boom in automobile sales. While an enormous surplus of crude oil and refined products exists, there are signs that it will be heavily drawn upon this year, and some authorities are catually predicting a gasoline shortage before the end of the next summer. Other consumers of oil products have been increasing their demands, and there seems to be a good cause for the strength in the oil stocks in these conditions.

The railroads of the country as a whole are showing constant improvement in gross and net earnings, but some isolated cases of a backward trend are reported. It is proposed in some quarters that there shall be a general lowering of freight rates in the next few weeks, but it is understood that this would have with it a corresponding reduction in wages. It is generally agreed that a reduction in railroad freight rates in the near future would act as a decided stimulous to general business.

The steel market reports a continuous good demand for steel products as a whole, and operations of the steel mills have been maintained at a high rate. Prices have been firmer and some further actual advances are looked for in the next few weeks.

LUMBER MARKET

With the advance of spring it becomes more and more evident that the lumber industry is to have a good year. Buying by retailers shows steady expansion, and very little of it is speculative, for lumber is going out of the retail yards as fast as it is being brought in, and, according to the American Lumberman, in some cases stocks are being sold more quickly than they can be replaced, requests for rush shipment being numerous. A number of the larger softwood producers have as much business on their books as they care to take on for some time, some having called their traveling men in off the road. Many of the large mills are very careful about accepting business for future delivery. Production, although it is steadily increasing, is much below orders, but numbers of small mills, particularly in the southern pine producing region, are opening up and will increase the quantity of lumber which will shortly be available.

The hardwood market is not so brisk as the softwood. During the last month prices of softwoods throughout the country have advanced. Hardwood demand is not so keen and, while the market is firm, sustained advances have been fewer. More hardwood is being taken by industrial concerns, but they are very careful about buying and are not seeking supplies for any great length of time ahead. Production of hardwoods in the south is much curtailed by flood conditions, and it is evident that as a result of recent inundations there is going to be a decided shortage in southern hardwoods at least.

News, Views and Reviews

New York, May 6.—(Special.)—Prospects of general good weather over the cotton belt during the week-end brought fresh selling into the market today. On the decline the offerings were well atken and certain large spot interests were credited with covering some of their hedges. This was of considerable volume and helped sustain the market. There has been much comment to the effect that there has been trade buying the last day or so while on the advance earlier in the week the buying was mostly from commission houses. It is noticeable that while the cotton tenders have been pretty heavy they have been easily absorbed. The reports from the cotton goods trade have been encouraging and these have given a better feeling all around. We continue to favor the bull side for the present.

Morning Stock Letter.

The so-called technical position of the oils might be subject to correction, but it is noticeable that no particular selling pressure seems to have been exerted when this group of stocks was at the top and the easing off seemed to be the result of realizing sales rather than of sales for the decline.

The market is still somewhat irregular and the trend not decided, but it is quite noticeable that there is a fair to good amount of buying power just underneath.

We like the action of the public utilities, especially gas.

The action of Maxwell "A" is entirely in line with what we have been saying, and we look for materially higher prices in this issue.

PEOPLE AND THINGS OF INTEREST TO WOMEN

BY LOUISE DOOLY

Will Women Be Satisfied With the World as It Is?

At the recent Pan-American conference and convention of the League of Women Voters in Baltimore there was assembled, probably, the most noteworthy gathering of women in history, and in this gathering the progressives were probably in the majority: Progressives both in the radical sense of departure from conventional standards, and progressives in that better sense, which would raise rather than supplant old standards, when these standards are in themselves good.

While these thousands of women were women who are getting out into public life to take their obligatory place with men—in making the world a better place to live in—some of the most noteworthy utterance were not radical, rather were they restatements of old-fashioned principles adapted to modern conditions.

Morover, it was a man, who in a few words, gave expression to one of the broadest, but earnest, viewpoints about woman's place in the world of today. Lord Astor, in explaining his wife's success in parliament, when brilliant men had failed, said that Lady Astor had not been satisfied with the world as it is.

And herein, to use a modern vulgar parlance, he spoke a mouthful.

Complacency, or to use a plainer and a truer term, selfishness, is the condition at the bottom of all government evils, municipal, state, national, international.

The attitude of everybody but the radicals is to attend to one's own business. The man who might gain influence in government on account of the prestige his personal success would carry, is not willing to mix up in politics.

He refuses to think out the real definition of minding his own business. If he is a banker he construes his own business to mean the affairs of his own bank, nor does he stop to consider that without the protection of government the banking business would be in a very poor way.

And so with the merchant, the doctor, the railroad man. They expect broad dealings from a government, local, state, or national, which they, through their inaction, permit to be run by men who do not understand the meaning of breadth of opinion.

Are the women going to follow in the footsteps of the me?

The helpmeet of Lord Astor completed his thought when she said in her principal address at Baltimore, "We women must put into public life those qualities which women have had to put into their home-life—unselfishness, cleanliness and kindness. The world needs it."

And, again, "If we possess courage and faith—and these are qualities which have always been conceded us—they will be of no value to us unless we use them. Faith is like a belief. It is only helpful if it leads us to knowledge."

And Lady Astor has proved in her own public life that knowledge is the best incentive to action.

12-Year-Old Girl Wins Scholarship For Farm Record

When Willie Frank Riles, who lives near Cusseta, Ga., goes to the State College of Agriculture in June, for the summer course in home economics, it is safe to predict that there will be no more interesting student

WILLIE FRANK RILES,

Of Cusseta, Ga., 12-year-old girl, who won the scholarship to the summer school at the State College of Agriculture for her canning club record.

from anywhere, and that nobody will get more value out of the course of study provided. And while other students will be followed by the good wishes of their families and friends, little Miss Riles will be cheered on by everybody in her community.

She is just twelve years old, but she made the best record of work in the girls' canning club of her county, and thus won the summer scholarship at Athens, where she will have the advantage of learning the best methods in practical home economics works, and as much of its theory as any girl can cram into a summer session.

Fresh vegetables are her specialty, and Fort Benning was her market. Her father was her selling agent, making the trip each day, although he had to leave home at 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning to reach the army reservation in a wagon, in time to get his goods to the purchasing agent before his competitor arrived.

Did Actual Work.

Willie Frank, however, did the actual work of preparing the ground for the crop, planting, cultivation, gathering the product, and canning that part of the crop which she did not sell as fresh vegetables.

She kept her own books, too, and here is her record:

Her Record.

COST OF CROP—
Rent of land and cost of seeds, fertilizers, containers, etc...	$ 11.63
Cost of cultivation of garden and harvesting crop	2.75
Cost of canning	2.00
Total cost of crop	$ 16.38
VALUE OF CROP—
Value of fresh vegetables, sold	$144.00
Value of fresh vegetables, used at home	102.40
Value of canned vegetables used at home	20.00
Total value	$266.40
Cost	16.38
Net profit for year	$250.02

When it was announced at Cusseta that Willie Frank Riles had made the record among the canning club girls of her community there was a doubt at first about whether she could take advantage of the scholarship opportunity, but the whole community rose up and said she must go.

All Proud of Her.

Everybody feels a pride in her work, and even the rural mail carrier claims a part in her achievement, because he carried the letters and the bulletins of instruction from the department of agriculture in which Miss Riles founded her successful work, which was inspired and encouraged by the county demonstration agent.

Be Careful What You Wash Your Hair With

Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali, which is very injurious, as it dries the scalp and makes the hair brittle.

The best thing to use is Mulsified cocoanut oil shampoo, for this is pure and entirely greaseless. It's very cheap and beats anything else all to pieces. You can get Mulsified at any drug store, and a few ounces will last the whole family for months.

Two or three teaspoonfuls of Mulsified in a cup or glass with a little warm water is all that is required. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, cleanses thoroughly, and rinses out easily. The hair dries quickly and evenly and is soft, fresh looking, bright, fluffy, wavy, and easy to handle. Besides, it loosens and takes out every particle of dust, dirt and dandruff. Be sure your druggist gives you Mulsified.—(adv.)

The Poor Man's Gallery--- Democracy in Art

BY CATHERINE POYAS WALKER

Atlanta's tangible marble art gallery is unfortunately still a dream of the future, but luckily for her citizens, she now possesses many pictures in her "Poor Man's Gallery," open daily and every night, and free to the public.

Since the reds, pinks and grey-greens of the budding trees and shrubbery have burst forth into leaf or flower, and the lawns and gardens are riotous with masses of color, the suburbs and more spacious parts of our gallery contain more pictures than the eye can take in.

But even those of us who live in the more crowded and shut-in parts of the art collection have our own pictures, liable to be overlooked by those to whom is given more spectacular color-values.

On their favorite pictures among those of this gallery, as among those of all other galleries, critics disagree. Far from presuming to be a critic, but reinforced and encouraged by the opinion of Corinne Roosevelt Robinson, that southern women are "natural connoisseurs," I venture to mention my favorite among the treasures of Atlanta's gallery.

A City Future.

To do it full justice you must view it from Broad street, coming from Alabama north to the viaduct. Paradoxically the best light is just after dark, preferably on a misty or even rainy evening. There you have before you tier after tier ablaze, the rows of lights from the office buildings, hung in nebulous space and filling the whole of it, with meteoric flashes marking the ascent and descent of their elevators, while the denser blacknesses of varying heights, barely reveal the outline of the skyscrapers against the sky. Overhead hang the steel girders of the viaduct, grimly black. Below, to the side, through the mist, are the lights of the stations and yards, steadily glowing; then the flare and glare of a passing train. On either side the ever-moving and never ceasing streams of flashing lights over the shadowy framework of the other viaducts. The whole scene is etherealized, made unearthly, and its shadows veiled by the mist of the dark. This is perhaps my favorite picture, worthy of a Whistler, or a Pennell, or of the greatest artist to be produced by the future.

But there are other pictures. An army officer stationed in Atlanta gave as his opinion:

"Atlanta women are beautiful enough to marry princes—but they don't." Who knows? In the good old fairy tales the right man was always a prince, or else a fool, and frequently both; and there is much that is true in fairy tales. But in any case, the part about the beauty is true. One has frequent glimpses of satisfyingly lovely faces—sometimes in strange places, for it is not always the most heralded beauties who most deserve the praise, and often times the goose girl is more beautiful than the princess.

One of the most picturesque and satisfyingly beautiful faces I have ever seen in Atlanta belonged to a woman, and from the multi-colored scarf which invariably covered her head, I presume she was a gypsy. Perfect in molding, in mobileness and in expression was the face of one ex-Atlanta woman, who has now gone into New York's poor man's gallery.

Cherubic Newsboys.

A scrap of a newsboy may reveal a cherub's face, a glance may fall upon Apollo in overalls, the graces in four or five-year-old dresses, Daphne, with a perfect profile under a shabby hat, or many

"More lovely than Pandora, whom the Gods Endowed with all their gifts," may be seen any day, in the streets or in the cars. But though equalizing the Greek sculpture in purity of contour, the types are entirely American.

Spring street has opened up new vistas. From just north of Carnegie way, looking up the hill toward Peachtree, there is a varied sky line, silhouetted with many towers, low, and mysterious at night, a higher building, and trees, whose gnarled branches and fretted lacework might be the envy of Sir Arthur Rackham, himself.

There are many interesting towers, for instance, the towers of the First Methodist church, the twin spires of Sacred Heart or the square tower of Saint Marks; and from Peachtree the low blue lighted spires of the LaFayette building, overhung by the white lights of the Spanish towers of the Ponce de Leon. Byron describes Venice, "Rising with her tiara of proud towers"; Atlanta's art gallery has its own tiara of towers, and of chimneys, for sometimes there is nothing more appealing than those prosaically utilitarian chimney pots, with mystic puffs of soft grey smoke, even if they do spread soot.

Another of my favorite pictures requires night to be seen at its best; night, but this time with a full moon. What could be more ethereal than the corner of Fifteenth street at Peachtree. The pillared church, with its stately guardian poplars, a dream made real in ivory; the shadowy greenery about the white fountain—the pale whiteness of an opposite house?

And the houses, ever-changing silhouettes, the poor man's gallery is well supplied with masterpieces, all that is necessary for us to do, possibly to keep us from becoming pauperized, is to supply our own frames.

Pageant at Hope School.

A spring pageant, planned by the R. L. Hope school, on Piedmont road, and sponsored by the Peachtree Road Woman's club, will take place on the lawn of the schoolhouse May 23, at 5 o'clock.

One hundred children are being trained to take part in the pageant and the club has charge of the sales of ice cream, cakes and candies at the different booths.

Mrs. Pooser Is Hostess.

Mrs. Stewart Pooser entertained her club at her home on Oak street. The living room and dining room were beautifully decorated with roses and other spring flowers.

The club members are Mrs. Charles Carr, Mrs. Ralph Reese, Mrs. K. Miller Boozer, Mrs. R. I. Martin, Mrs. Burton Goodman, Mrs. Charles McClelland, Mrs. W. M. Wise, Mrs. Claud Lemke, Mrs. J. Fletcher Hutt, Mrs. Sterrett Pooser.

Sage Foundation Work Described By Woman Worker

Miss Margaret Reeves of the research department Russell Sage Foundation, was an interesting visitor in Atlanta the past week, her mission to study institutions for girls.

Georgia is the thirty-fifth state she has reached in her survey, and she expects to cover the country. Recently she has had interesting experience of welfare achievements in North Carolina and is highly impressed with the system of work by the state welfare board, and her comments were most favorable concerning mountain school education in Tennessee.

"While South Dakota is my native state," said Miss Reeves, "my college days were spent at Radcliffe, and my social work has been mostly in Philadelphia and New York, I am not one of those people who believe that everything that is good must come out of the north.

Russell Sage Foundation.

"My tour of thirty-five states has afforded me a rather wide outlook, and I find that progressiveness, worth while achievement, is not limited to any one section. Good work is being done everywhere," and it was here that she spoke of the work in North Carolina and Tennessee.

Her description of the character and purpose of the Russell Sage Foundation as expressed through her particular part of it, would be particularly illuminating, especially to those who hold superficial views of social reasearch which is limited to the critical side of its program.

"Our work," explained Miss Reeves, "is not a pry into institutions with the idea of criticism. What we look for is the good work being done.

"If you are carrying on here in Atlanta, for instance, some model probation system in your juvenile court, whether you originated this plan or are merely using to special advantage a plan originated by some other city, we want to know about it. I study the system, or your successful methods of carrying it out, and report back to New York.

Profiting by Experience.

"There your excellent, new system or your particularly effective way of carrying out an old one, is made a matter of record, and when some other city, eager to institute a new probation work or to better what it is doing, comes to Russell Sage Foundation for advice, we have ready for their instruction the model work being done in Atlanta. Thus a city or a private institution need not learn through its mistakes, but may start at once on the right task, and profit by your experience.

"We have inquiries even from Europe about the most approved methods of social work; those which are bringing the best results and the data I am gathering about work for girls is just one item in an educational program which is universally available, and plans above all things to be serviceable."

GOSSAMER

BY SELMA WACKER.

Miss Wacker, who is from Rocky Ford, Ga., is a student of the Carnegie Library Training school, of Atlanta, and this poem took the prize in the contest of the South Carolina Press association for the best short story, essay, poem, and one act drama appearing in any college magazine in the state during the school year. This poem appeared in the college paper of the Winthrop college, Rock Hill, S. C.:

Her dress of woven butterflies
Was a mystic, shimmering green,
That clung in 'witching fairy folds
Of airy gossamer sheen.

Her sweet breath was the flowers' perfume,
Her voice like note of bird;
But deep within the heart of Spring
Impulsive nature stirred.

A roguish Frost Sprite lurkin' near
Was well aware of this,
And tripping on a stealthy toe,
Slipt up and stole a kiss.

In vengeance then she freed the winds
And set them all a-flying;
In dashing April torrents fell
Her tears of fitful crying.

But now the sunbeams in her eyes
Lit up their azure hue;
It seemed they were a trysting place
Where sunshine met with dew.

Is Jazz Music? "No" Is Answer Of Music Clubs

When the annual convention of the National Supervisors of Music in the schools was held in Nashville, Tenn., among the invited guests were the president of the National Federation of Music clubs, Mrs. John F. Lyons, of Texas, and the South Atlantic district president, Miss Nan Stephens, of Georgia. One of the most important features on the programs was the fine speech by Mrs. Lyons, in which she pledged the support and co-operation of the National Federation of Music clubs in public school music. So great was the interest aroused by Mrs. Lyons that her remaks were quoted by other speakers, and the entire convention body bespoke its active interest in the activities of the National Federation of Music clubs.

One of the speeches which caused wide argument was made by Carl Engel, chief of the music division of the library of congress in Washington. Mr. Engel spoke in defense of jazz, declaring it to be less dreadful than it is pictured, and affirming the statement of several radicals who say the jazz is the one contribution America has made to music.

Mr. Engel is a clever speaker. He is witty and clothes his points in many oratorical furbelows. His speech, on account of his shrewdness, was received with enthusiasm by many of those who missed the real points in his argument. In many minds indignation was aroused that a governmental official should make such statements in defense of an evil that threatens our whole social structure. The following day when Mrs. Lyons again spoke, she answered Mr. Engel for the federation with characteristic brevity. She declared "Friends, there is jazz and there is music—but there is no jazz music."

Since Mr. Engel declared that people put the harm in jazz and not jazz in the people, an experiment was decided on very quietly by charming Mrs. Sperry, hostess for the reception and dance given to the music supervisors by the ballroom of the Hermitage hotel. She engaged an orchestra and commanded them to play no jazz. Throughout the evening the mass of guests talked and danced to good music excellently played. All went well until the orchestra suddenly began to play jazz. Before the hostess could travel the length of the ballroom three couples had to be ordered off the floor. It was a direct answer to Mr. Engel's statements.

Later in the meeting the board of directors of the National Federation of Music clubs, the question was again brought up, and resolutions passed to unite in a nation-wide campaign against jazz.
